Senate Gives Up Holiday To Speed Aid Bill Action

Session Ordered Today as Leaders Drive for Vote By Next Saturday

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Through sharpening opposition oratory, Senate Administration leaders drove the lend-lease bill yesterday toward a hoped-for vote before Britain's crisis.

A Saturday session was ordered to speed action, as the first suggestion of "filibuster" crept into Senate debate.

It was drawling, humorous Senator William J. Bulow of South Dakota who mentioned the method that both sides have agreed would be barred in debate on this bill.

One of three Senators to enter the day-long attack on the measure, Bulow said:

"I am not so sure but what a so-called Senate filibuster in continuing the debate upon this bill until Europe settles its own war would be very beneficial to the people of the United States.

No Echoing Response

"It might keep us from getting into that war and it would keep the Nation out of bankruptcy."

The suggestion found no echoing response among opposition leaders, who denied any intentions of delay. Opponents have asked from three to four more days to complete set speeches against the bill. After that, commencing next Thursday at latest, Administration leaders hope to drive every amendment and the bill to rapid votes. Passage not later than next Saturday, is the goal.

Today debate in the Senate will open with Senator White, of Maine, a Republican supporter of the bill reading George Washington's "Farewell Address."

Then the opposition attack will be resumed, with Senator Taft, of Ohio, and Senator Capper, of Kansas (Republicans), leading.

Joining Bulow in yesterday's trio of Senate opposition speeches were Gillette, of Iowa, a Democrat, and Brooks, of Illinois, a Republican.

Brooks' "Maiden" Speech

It was Brooks' "maiden" speech in the Senate. He read a 16-page prepared address denouncing the bill as "un-American," and as "a leap toward dictatorship" that would "involve us ultimately in a foreign war."

Gillette, who has announced he will not seek reelection, led off with a denunciation of the bill as a delegation of authority "to commit acts of war." He said he would not vote such authority "to any man who breathes, however wise, patriotic and sincere he may be."

Other developments:

Administration leaders arranged to confer with President Roosevelt at the White House Tuesday morning, when both House and Senate chiefs will report on final legislative steps to enactment.

Chairman George of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, who was ill when the debate opened, announced he will make

2 Army Fliers Die In Crash on Flight From D.C. to Ohio

Two Army officers were killed last night when a long-range Army attack plane crashed into a hill near Athens, Ohio, bouncing into a 100-barrel oil tank, exploding and burning, the War Department announced.

The ship, described as an A-17-A type, left Bolling Field, Army Flying Station here, at 6 o'clock tonight, piloted by Capt. Lawrence J. Eyler and bearing as a passenger, Capt. Russell Montgomery, both of the Air Corps Reserve.

Little Girl Needs Transfusion— A Grateful Mother Saves Day

Hospital Visitor Gives Her Blood As Supply Fails

MRS. ELOISE LAVRISCHEFF

At Children's Hospital yesterday a little girl waited for a blood transfusion of a type whose supply had just been exhausted.

A mother with the same type of blood came in to thank the hospital for its service to her own two children. She, Mrs. Eloise Lavrischeff, 30-year-old widow, suggested she might be of use to the blood bank. A doctor told her if her blood were type four, he could use her immediately. It was. And the little patient promptly received the needed transfusion.

Mrs. Lavrischeff is a clerk at the Federal Housing Administration. Her son, John, 7, underwent two operations in Children's Hospital in 1938, and David, 4, had his tonsils removed there recently. They live at 1318 Eleventh Street Northwest.

While she was figuring in the incident at the hospital yesterday, plans advanced for the George Washington's Birthday Ball of the American Legion, District Department, tonight at the Mayflower Hotel. At this party officials will present a check representing proceeds from seven legion parties and five posts' donations for the Blood Bank fund. The presentation will be made to an executive of The Washington Post, which, with the Legion and Station WJSV, spon-

OPM to Buy So. American Canned Meat

But There Won't Be Any Furore, Domestic Producers Agree

A "material broadening" of the Government's meat purchases for the Army and Navy, linked with development of an "all-around emergency ration" will require buying some South American canned meat, it was announced last night.

Donald M. Nelson, director of purchases for the OPM, made the announcement after consultation with domestic livestock representatives, and it was indicated that the program will cause no such furore as has attended previous purchases of South American meat by the Government.

Meat is to play an increased part in the rations provided to the men in the field, it was made clear. Nelson said that present requirements indicate that "on a basis of per man per day" each soldier and sailor will consume 60 per cent more meat than the civilian per capita consumption during 1940.

Nelson said the new program provides "broad support for the entire domestic meat market through the new development of an all-round emergency ration—with its proportionate share of meat products—which opens an entire new field in the preparation of canned meat supplies for the armed forces."

"It was recognized by the representative of the livestock producers," he said, "that due to this development, which requires all of the domestic canned meat facilities, that some purchase of South American canned beef is necessary

Congressional representatives of Western livestock areas heretofore have violently opposed buying of meat from Argentina and other Latin-American countries, but Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, who has led such opposition, arranged the meeting between Nelson and the livestock representatives and said last night he would not oppose the arrangement announced.

Navy Fears Fifth Column In Cargo Fleet

Subversive Radio Operators a Special Peril, Admiral Says

By Cecil B. Dickson
International News Service Staff Writer

The Navy Department yesterday called on Congress to oust any Communist or pro-Nazi radio operators from the American Merchant Marine, holding that victory or defeat for this country may rest with operators on merchant ships.

Speaking for the Navy Department, Rear Admiral S. C. Hooper, chief communications officer, told the House Merchant Marine Committee a subversive Merchant Marine radio operator might disclose the position of the U. S. fleet to an enemy and cause its defeat.

Admiral Hooper said Congress should investigate the radio operators, after Fred M. Howe, of the Radio Officers' Union, a member of the A. F. of L., said "the Government should divest the Merchant Marine of the 150 agents of Soviet Russia who are now employed as radio officers on American vessels."

"The radio operator is in a better position than anyone other than the master of the ship to cause trouble," Admiral Hooper said. "The radio operator can communicate with the enemy and nobody knows what he is sending out. An operator with subversive ideas could divulge the position of the fleet.

"It might even be a matter between victory or defeat. The operator can communicate with the enemy and tell them anything he wants."

Admrial Hooper said Congress should investigate the method of employing merchant ship radio operators.

"It would be very advisable to have Congress look into that very, very thoroughly and have us (the Navy Department) give the military part of it," said the admiral. "The Navy Department would expect to be called as a witness."

Admiral Hooper said Congress

Truce Gives Out

Three Strikes in Defense Plants Are Settled and Two Begin

By the Associated Press

Strikes in three plants producing defense materials ended yesterday, but walkouts occurred at two others.

A group of employes—union officials said 350 and the management 200—quit work at the Combustion Engineering Co., Chattanooga, Tenn., which produces boilers and fabricated steel articles. The C. I. O. Steel Workers Organizing Committee said the men were asking increased wages and an adjustment of working hours. The company, employing about 1,500, has some defense orders.

The other walkout, at the Bridgeville, Pa., plant of the Universal-Cyclops Steel Corporation, was a renewal of a previous strike at the expiration of a 15-day "truce." Involving about 1,500 men, the strike was called by the C. I. O. Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers which is asking a blanket wage increase. The company has orders for several million dollars worth of special steels for defense orders.

Officials of the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co. and officers of the striking CIO United Automobile Workers Union reached an impasse in negotiations at Milwaukee and the peace parley was adjourned subject to the call of a Federal Labor Department conciliator. The company has $45,000,000 in defense contracts.

Efforts to settle the dispute, now in its fifth week, came to a halt when an argument arose over creation of an impartial referee to

Both Houses Move Toward Arms Inquiry

Military Committee Of Senate Reports Out Resolution for Wide Investigation

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

A broad investigation into the national defense program appeared probable yesterday from developments in both Senate and House.

The Senate Military Affairs Committee favorably reported a resolution of Senator Truman (Democrat), of Missouri, usually an Administration supporter, to set up a seven-man committee for a "full and complete study and investigation" of procurement and construction for national defense.

The committee approved Senator Truman's resolution by voice vote, and it was indicated that virtually the only opposition came from one or two members who wanted the inquiry to be conducted by a Military Affairs Subcommittee instead of a separate group. Chairman Sheppard, of the Military Affairs Committee, reportedly argued to this effect, but without success.

House Committee to Act

Meanwhile, The Post was informed that the House Rules Committee will act early next week on one of many proposals that have been submitted for an investigation into the national defense effort. It is understood that considerable pressure has come from various Representatives, who have complained of favoritism, geographical discrimination and the like in defense contracts.

Although there have been proposals for a joint Congressional investigation, the Senate resolution reported yesterday makes no provision for House participation. The seven members of the committee would be Senators appointed by Vice President Wallace.

The investigation proposal must run the gamut of the Audit and Control Committee for funds. This group includes Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, chairman, and Senator Truman. The resolution asked for a maximum of $25,000.

Scope Would Be Wide

The Truman proposal would permit an inquiry into such highly controversial matters as the "geographic distribution of contracts;" the "practices of management or labor" which "unduly increase" the cost of the program; the utilization of small business concerns; the methods by which contracts are awarded, and "such other matters as the committee deems appropriate."

Asked if the investigation might not embarrass the Defense Commission, Senator Truman observed that it will be "much less embarrassing if made by people with the success of the program at heart than otherwise." He commented that he was interested in seeing that "the little fellow will get an equal opportunity with the big one all over the country."

Resolutions offered in the House include proposals of Representative Maas (Republican), of Minnesota, who would set up a new standing committee on Government contracts, with power to investigate abuses.

11 Latin Nations Agree to U. S. Plan To Grow Rubber

By the United Press

The Agriculture Department has concluded agreements with 11 Latin American countries for experiments designed to make the Western Hemisphere eventually a self-sufficient rubber-producing center, the United Press was informed last night.

Standard agreements have been made with Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Guatemala, Haiti, Nicaragua, Mexico, Panama, Peru and Venezuela.

In all cases the United States has agreed to cooperate with these countries in furnishing materials for the experiments.

An official of the United States Department of Agriculture said the department had acquired land and established at least one experimental station in each of the 11 countries.

"Under the agreement," he said, "we furnish each country with materials for the experiments and help them to establish nurseries for seedling trees so we can have at each place hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions of rubber trees to be distributed by the local government to prospective native commercial producers."

Agreements were concluded after

Nazis Predict Intensified U-Boat Drive

'Radical Solution' Of Mediterranean Problems Forecast

By Jack Fleischer
United Press Staff Writer

Berlin, Feb. 21.—Germany is ready to embark on a "radical military solution" of the Mediterranean struggle simultaneous with intensified U-boat and aerial assaults opening the way for "a direct attack upon England," an officially inspired statement said today.

German informed quarters extended the warning of an all-out submarine warfare to include the United States as well as Britain.

"The possibilities of an invasion of England are so numerous that it may be difficult for the English to see through our feints," said the authoritative organ, Dienst Aus Deutschland.

Evidently referring to Adolf Hitler's refusal to be drawn into war in the Balkans, the magazine said that Germany will not repeat Marshal Von Ludendorff's 1918 error by spreading its armed forces over "remote fronts" and failing to keep huge concentrations on the major battlefront.

Berlin realizes that President Roosevelt's lend-lease bill is near passage, it was said, but the question remains "whether England will really receive aid or not."

The invasion and crushing of Britain, it was added, will be "more significant to the war's outcome

Gorilla Bride-to-Be Scares Daylights Out of Gargantua

By the Associated Press

Sarasota, Fla., Feb. 21.—Miss Toto, the gorilla Ringling Circus officials hope will soon become Mrs. Gargantua the Great, met her prospective mate today and scared the daylights out of him.

Toto had a black-and-white cat—her constant companion—in her cage along with Keeper Jose Tomas and bolstered by this company, paid no attention at first to 600-pound Gargy when their cages were rolled to within 18 inches of each other.

Gargantua grabbed the bars of his home and peered at the 9-year-old, 438-pound Toto. He appeared puzzled. Then he backed off and cringed.

Toto paid him no heed. Feelings hurt, Gargy tossed a bridal bouquet of celery tops into Toto's cage.

Said his keeper, Richard Kroener, laughing: "Gargantua's afraid."

Then Toto turned her back, wrapped herself in a blanket and forgot the whole business.

Gargy still pounded his chest and waved his arms but he didn't put much heart into it.

Australia Is Able And Willing to Defend Herself, Menzies Warns

By Robert P. Post
Copyright by New York Times

London, Feb. 21.—The Australian Prime Minister, Robert Gordon Menzies, made his first appearance since he arrived in London today in a press conference during which he bluntly warned Japan that Australia was prepared to defend itself in and around "the ocean wherein there were elements of danger in 1941 that did not exist in 1914."

At the same time, the Associated Press dispatches said that Britain was shifting Royal Air Force reinforcements to the Far East, and that other R. A. F. units were said to be moving to Africa and Greece to join those already there in meeting German aerial assistance to Italy.

This diversion of a portion of Britain's air strength was made possible, it was explained, by the arrival of new contingents of pilots from empire training centers and new reserves of bombers from the United States.

Japan Was Ally in Last War

Australia is now more powerful than ever before in her history, Menzies said, and has recently taken over new responsibilities, by which he meant the landing of Australian troops at Singapore. Australia has no aggressive design and wants only peace in the Pacific, Menzies declared. But he said:

"At the same time we must remember in Australia that in the last war, for example, Japan was our ally. We are indebted for many neighborly acts which are remembered with gratitude and pleasure. But in this war Japan has entered into an alliance of some kind with the Axis powers and has assumed obligations of some kind in certain contingencies to those who at the moment are our enemies. It would be idle to pretend that gives us in Australia a Pacific identical with the one we looked at in the last war."

Menzies developed this, though concluding with the statement that he had no intention of being provocative. "But it must not be thought by anybody that, remote as we are, we are not willing to defend ourselves or are incapable of defending ourselves."

Menzies thus added his contribution to the swelling symphony of "toughness" which the British and possibly the United States are playing for Japanese benefit.

The entire British attitude toward Japan has swung completely around in recent weeks and the Menzies statement was only another indica-

Nazi Field Kitchens Start to Santander; London Provides Grain

By the Associated Press

Santander, Spain, Feb. 21.—Belligerent Britain, Italy and Germany waged a tug-of-war for the good will of Spain today, each volunteering aid for the relief of this storm-wrecked city.

Upon acceptance of the offer of German Ambassador Baron Eberhard von Stohrer, army field kitchens, ambulances, a military hospital and complete companies of sanitary technicians and engineers with motorized transport were dispatched from occupied France. The kitchens are equal to preparing meals for 30,000 persons. The engineers, it was said, will aid in clearing away debris from the city, swept by a storm and fire last week.

At the same time, it was announced that the British, at the instance of Sir Samuel Hoare, British Ambassador, were diverting two shiploads of wheat and oats to the relief of Santander. The ships, Belgique and Czarda, were being sent from Gibraltar.

Francesco Lequio, the Italian Ambassador, presented Foreign Minister Ramon Serrano Suner 100,000 pesetas (about $9,000) on behalf of Premier Mussolini for aid to the city.

Reports of 11 more fatalities in Portugal brought to 188 the number of known dead in the hurricane which swept over the entire Spanish peninsula last weekend.

Berlin Confirms Report

Berlin (Saturday), Feb. 22 (INS).—It was officially announced early today that Germany, with the consent of the Spanish government, had arranged for the dispatch to the fire-swept city of Santander of a German military relief expedition.

Hospitals Cold-Shouldered GHA Surgeon, U. S. Charges

By Gerald G. Gross.
Post Staff Writer

How Washington hospitals, under pressure by the District Medical Society, cold-shouldered Group Health Association doctors was told to a District Court jury yesterday by the United States Government.

Seeking to show that organized medicine conspired to deny hospital facilities to the cooperative physicians, the prosecution read voluminous correspondence exchanged by G. H. A. and the institutions when the former was trying to obtain courtesy privileges in 1937 and 1938.

On the witness stand as the letters were presented to the jury was William F. Penniman, first president of G. H. A., who led its efforts to gain such privileges for staff doctors.

One after another the hospitals were approached by Penniman, but in vain, the correspondence demonstrated. They courteously acknowledged receipt of requests for information as to how Dr. Raymond E. Selders, G. H. A. staff surgeon, might apply for admittance, but nothing ever came of it.

In the case of Garfield Hospital, Dr. Selders' application was definitely rejected, with regrets, after it had been studied by the Washington Academy of Surgery. The latter is one of the four medical groups on trial.

The explanation given was that the surgeon could not be admitted to practice in the hospital until G. H. A. had been proved to be a legal Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Feb. 21.—A series of reports from Bulgaria tonight contend that regular units of the German army have begun entering the country, presumably across the pontoon bridges flung over the Danube River yesterday. Upon thorough investigation of these stories, it would appear that they are as yet unfounded and premature.

However, Reuters, British news agency, said in a dispatch from Belgrade that "according to one unconfirmed report, German troops have been crossing the Danube into Bulgaria at the Bulgarian town of Ruse since 4 p. m. (10 a. m., Eastern standard time) Friday."

Among the contradictory rumors directly traceable to Sofia informants are the following:

1. That the Wehrmacht has been coming in over the pontoon briges.
2. That the pontoons have been taken back to the Rumanian side of the river.
3. That new German headquarters have been established at King Boris' palace at Tchamkoria.
4. That they have been set up in Sofia and that Gen. Liszt has assumed charge of occupation operations.

Neither in Sofia nor in other Bulgarian cities was any exact appreciation of the situation obtainable tonight. There were persistent reports of anti-German demonstrations in Ruschuk and Pleven, but these tales are not confirmable. A ranking Sofia diplomat said tonight that a double-track railroad line had been set up on pontoons between Giurgiu, Rumania, and Rus-

Town in Wales Bombed Severely By Germans

London (Saturday), Feb. 22 (AP).—Waves of German bombers attacking a Welsh coastal town for several hours last night and early today caused a number of casualties and "severe" property damage.

The town was not identified immediately, but Swansea in South Wales was raided the two previous nights.

The first planes lit the way with incendiary bombs which caused fires, then high explosives were dropped.

Pegler in Sunday's Post

No one ever accused Westbrook Pegler of looking at the world through rose-colored glasses. No one ever accused him of being dull, either. He'll still be in the daily Post, too, except on Mondays.

Twelve Italian Planes Downed In Albania

By the Associated Press

Athens, Feb. 21.—War in Albania, stalemated aground, has surged into the skies with British and Greek air forces reporting today that 12 Italian planes were downed in clashes with fighter formations.

(Coincidentally the Italian high command reported that its fighters had brought down 12 planes over the Albanian front yesterday, the day of the British-Greek action.)

The engagements came when Italian Fiats pounced on R. A. F. and Greek bomber flights aimed at objectives behind the Italian lines near Berati and Tepeleni.

Hurricane fighters were protecting the British bombers and an R. A. F. communique said seven Italian machines were brought down in two battles.

The Greek high command reported its planes shot down five aircraft. When one of their escorted bomber formations was intercepted by 30 Fiats, it said, the Greek fighters held the Italians in dogfights while the bombers broke through to their objectives.

The R. A. F. reported all aircraft returned safely, while the Greeks said their only loss was one plane forced to land, with its crew uninjured.

On the ground, the Greek high command said Greek forces had captured 200 prisoners and occupied "strong enemy positions," but did not locate the actions.

chuk, and another diplomat flatly denied the information.

One can say only that the occupation appears more nearly imminent than ever. But, perhaps, the Germans are holding off either for a further diplomatic move or to time the occupation with an Italian offensive in Albania.

The Belgrade press publishes a report of the debate among the Bulgarian Sobranje (parliament) deputies, which is not made public in Sofia. The papers say that a deputy said: "What interests the Bulgarian people most at present is the question of the passage of German troops and the attitude of Yugoslavia in this matter."

Another deputy, Ivan Batemberski, allegedly complains "the pontoon bridges on the Danube at Ruschuk are ready and we deputies are completely uninformed about what is happening."

The deputies were reported extremely pessimistic after Bulgarian Premier Bogdan Philoff is said to have abstained from all reference to such German activity in his reply. This caused great sensation in Belgrade.

The press here reports that German mediation efforts between Greece and Italy are proceeding apace, and reprints a statement by the Hamburger Fremdenblatt that "southeastern Europe is no longer exposed to British influence. Only Greece through her own fault has remained the last base of Great Britain in this area."

Army of Nile Ready For Balkans, Say Turks

By the Associated Press

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Feb. 21.—With Nazi pontoons reported lacing the ice-free Danube in preparation for a mass German march into Bulgaria, the Turkish official radio broadcast tonight that the British are holding large forces in North Africa in readiness for a swift sally into the Balkans by way of Greece.

Thus, said the broadcast, Britain either is considering establishment of a general Balkan front against the Germans or she intends to prevent Greece from being rushed into an untimely armistice under the threat of Nazi invasion by way of Bulgaria.

(Both Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden and Gen. Sir John Dill, the chief of the British Imperial General Staff, are in Cairo, and there are strong intimations that they are concerned primarily with the German threat to Greece and Turkey, which in turn might become a threat to the whole British position in the Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East.)

The Turkish radio noted the lack of news about the doings of the Army of the Nile since it completed the domination of Cirenaica, and said: "The British may be holding these forces in readiness for an instant call to Greece."

'Dictator's' Pupils Get Taste of Goosestep With Trimmings to Show Value of U. S. Way

LESSON ON BILL OF RIGHTS—So students will appreciate the meaning of the Bill of Rights, a "Dictatorship Day" was staged yesterday at the Pierson High School in Sag Harbor, N. Y., fashionable Long Island community. The girls scrubbed the sidewalks under orders of boys portraying "storm troopers"

By the Associated Press

Sag Harbor, N. Y., Feb. 21.—A one-day dictatorship at the Pierson Elementary and High School in this fashionable Long Island community went into reverse today when the dictator's daughter was "arrested."

The arrests and the "dictatorship" of Principal E. Raymond Schneible were all in fun, but at the same time a serious demonstration of what life might be like without the Bill of Rights.

The amateur Gestapo—made up of members of the high school band—accused Schneible's pretty daughter Nancy of playing casino, a card game, with two chums outside of school. She was summarily "convicted" without trial.

Schneible had no more sympathy for his daughter than for the 159 other students "arrested" for refusing to conform to the "new order."

"She probably needed it," he said.

Boys, weary from sweeping floors, washing dishes and ironing in the home economics room, and girls, rebelling at scrubbing stairs and washing windows, attempted to overthrow the dictator.

"They came to my office grumbling and said they didn't like living under a dictatorship," Schneible said. "They said 'Let's get back to the U. S. A.' This day inculcated into these youngsters a new meaning of our Bill of Rights."

Climaxing a celebration of Bill of Rights Week, fixed by State law, the school abrogated the bill of rights for the day.

"Crimes" included having waved hair, expressing an opinion, failing to goosestep to class, snickering, wearing lipstick, staying out last night at 9 o'clock curfew.

A "bureau of misinformation" was set up.

Teachers were storm troopers, and were empowered to tell students: "You're going to take me home to lunch. And I want a nice steak smothered with onions."

Greece Sends U.S. New Plea For Planes

By Lloyd Lehrbas

Associated Press Staff Writer

Sumner Welles, Undersecretary of State, said yesterday that consideration was being given to Greece's renewed request for material aid and he indicated some action might be taken soon.

He recalled that Greece had made a plea soon after the outbreak of hostilities with Italy and had been promised that the United States would do all possible to meet it.

Since then, he said the question had arisen several times in conversations he had held with the Greek Minister and that Government officials were still seeking to determine just what supplies might be furnished.

The new request for help—particularly airplanes—was made by Greek officials directly to the American Legation in Athens. The legation forwarded it direct to the State Department.

Cimon P. Diamantopoulos, the Greek Minister, conferred with Undersecretary Welles Thursday, but both refrained from statements on their talk. It was reported, however, that they had discussed Greece's situation in the light of the most recent developments, including the Turco-Bulgarian pact, and that the question of speedy American aid had been "mentioned."

The problem of finding planes for Greece is admittedly beset with difficulties, for aircraft factories already are loaded with orders for the Army, Navy, Britain and China. The question, however, was understood to be under study by the Navy Department and the national defense commission's priorities board.

Germans Predict Fierce U-Boat War

than Libya or even Ethiopia in English hands."

In discussing what it called "Berlin's calculations," Dienst Aus Deutschland said that future military action by Germany may be expected to involve:

1. Intensified U-boat warfare in Hitler's blockade of the British Isles.

2. A "large-scale employment" of the German air force against the British Isles and British shipping, to bring about "a deadly strangulation of the British Isles."

3. A "radical military solution of the Mediterranean problems."

German naval surface forces also will be brought into play, it was said.

Germany's huge submarine fleet, it was intimated, is being held in reserve for the "supreme attack" on Britain, although the Dienst Aus Deutschland said that of 296,000 tons of British shipping sunk in the first 20 days of February U-boats accounted for 78,500 tons.

The Nazi high command, announcing the 296,000-ton figure, said that German air bombings of convoys in British waters during the past 48 hours had sunk or irreparably damaged seven British ships totaling 33,500 tons.

Three steamers totaling 11,500 tons were said to have been sunk outright.

DNB reported that German bombers today "successfully attacked" two tankers of 3,000 and 5,000 tons in the Atlantic about 440 miles west of Ireland, but that details of the attack had not been learned.

Fog Troops Rehearsing

Rome, Feb. 21 (AP).—The newspaper L'Avvenire said today special German motorized formations called "nebeltruppen" (fog troops) which were used in Poland, especially at Modlin in the battle for Warsaw, were being rehearsed for an invasion of England.

Nazis Seize Potatoes After Paris Food Riot

Vichy, Feb. 21 (AP).—Reports from Paris today said the German administrators had ordered the city deprived of potato supplies for 40 days as a result of disorders in the central market section.

Second British Column Crosses Juba River

Copyright by New York Times

Cairo, Feb. 21.—British forces in Italian Somaliland forced their way across the Juba River yesterday at a point north of the crossing effected the previous day. The advance is now continuing from both bridgeheads.

British spokesmen here denied there had been any attack launched at Jirabub oasis, as the Italians claimed. The British, realizing the garrison's position to be hopeless, refrained from attacking because Jirabub is the religious shrine of the Senussi Arabs, they said.

During the last few weeks, Libyans, who have been deserting the oasis in large numbers, have been reporting that food is growing short.

Captures in Eritrea now number 47 Italian officers, including a brigade commander, 698 Italian ranks and 5,566 colonials. Many others have been take in the Blue Nile and the upper Nile areas, near the Sudan border, and by Abyssinian patriots in the Gojjam region.

A total of 107 Italian medium tanks is reported to have been captured in the battle south of Bengasi.

German war planes again raided Bengasi yesterday. Slight damage was caused and one of the raiders was shot down in flames by anti-aircraft fire. One British fighter was lost in the day's operations in the Middle East.

War Secretary Anthony Eden spent a busy day conferring with military leaders here today and this evening was closeted with Gen. Georges Catroux, commander of the Free French forces in the Middle East.

River Islands Taken

Chisimaio, Italian Somaliland, Feb. 21 (AP).—A detachment of the King's African Rifles captured today the islands of Deiserpenti and Mohangayapap in Refuge Bay, here at the mouth of the Juba River. The British unit sailed against the islands in dhows, native boats used along the east African coast.

Italy Calls Up Natives

Rome, Feb. 21 (AP).—All available native and Italian manpower in Eritrea, Ethiopia and Italian Somaliland is being called to the defense of the East African empire against the British.

The most threatening of Britain's thrusts is that into Eritrea, where a garrison of Italian and natives still is reported holding out in Cheren.

British forces driving into Eritrea were estimated at 100,000. These include colonials and natives "amply supplied with motor trucks, artillery and tanks."

In Ethiopia native man power was sought, dispatches from East Africa said, with the backing of tribal chieftains opposed to the return of Haile Selassie.

Negus' Men Attack

London, Feb. 21 (AP).—A Reuters (British news agency) dispatch date-lined "with the Ethiopian regular army" said today that Emperor Haile Selassie's regular troops led by British South African officers got their first "blooding" in an attack on an Italian fortified position at Danglia, in the Lake Tana sector of western Ethiopia.

Vichy, Feb. 21.—From a financial advertisement appearing in Le Temps this evening the French public learns that the Bor copper mines in Yugoslavia which were operated by a French corporation are about to pass under German control, namely, "Igfarbenindustrie."

The advertisement indicates the deal has been concluded "conformably with the desire and accord of the French government."

Tokyo Press Rails at French In Indo-China

By Hugh Byas
Copyright by New York Times

Tokyo, Feb. 21.—Charges that the French authorities in Indo-China are plotting against Japan in an attempt to encircle the Japanese garrisons, for which purpose they are obtaining arms and munitions from Singapore and recruiting native forces in Tongking, are made in the leading editorials of the newspaper, Asahi, today.

Asahi's charges are based on news dispatches from Domei, official news agency, and other Japanese correspondents in Indo-China reporting that the French government is engaged in drastic military and economic actions against Japan with British forces being massed at the frontiers to menace the Thailand defenses.

Blame U. S., Britain

Asahi finds the French action to be partly explained by heavy pressure resulting from Anglo-American preparations for war.

"Thailand, even while its very existence is being threatened by British forces massed on the border, is keeping faith with Japan. In glaring contrast, Indo-China is using American-British influences to arm itself against Japan's peaceful economic advance, and is doing it with undisguised malice," says Asahi, which continues:

"Leaders of the French Indo-China government, who are in secret contact with Singapore, are frantically endeavoring to purchase large supplies of munitions. They have begun large-scale recruiting in Tongking in order to strengthen their forces. French liaison officers in Singapore are pouring oil on the Anglo-American war preparations by spreading the falsehood that Japan is attempting to menace Singapore by operations in Indo-China. In addition large supplies of food and munitions are being sent to Chungking.

"Those activities are clearly designed to encircle the Japanese garrison in Indo-China."

"The Indo-China government's export control decrees are aimed precisely at excluding Japan's peaceful economic activities and uprooting Japanese economic interests. This attitude on the part of French Indo-China is undoubtedly influenced by the aggressive policies of Britain and America.

"Every move the Anglo-American combination makes is intended to cut out Japan's trade and force the smaller countries of the Pacific to join an encirclement front against Japan.

"French Indo-China's attitude in going more than halfway to meet the (Anglo-American) policy is becoming intolerable."

The newspaper Hochi tonight reports that the French Indo-China forces, disregarding the peace conference in Tokyo, shelled the Thailand forces on the Eastern border yesterday, and states that this move was inspired by the French success in obtaining a supply of airplanes from Singapore.

Ex-U. S. Destroyers Hunting U-Boats

London, Feb. 21 (AP).—All the destroyers which Britain obtained from the United States now are in waters around the British Isles and have been "mostly concerned with antisubmarine operations," it was learned authoritatively today.

Fifty destroyers were transferred under a deal for bases on British Empire soil in the Western Hemisphere but six of them went to Canada.

Landlords Hit By Vichy Decree

Vichy, Feb. 21.—Pursuing its policy of encouraging large families, the Petain government has decreed that any landlord refusing to lease a house or apartment on the pretext that the would-be leasee has too many children will henceforth be liable to fines.

In Paris particularly there were many complaints before the war that landlords banned children in apartment houses because they were noisy and did damage to fittings.

Rubber Industry Displays Its Defense Marvels in D. C.

MODEL OF K-2 DISPLAYED—P. W. Litchfield (right), of the Goodyear Co., points out the model of the airship, K-2, 48 of which are under construction for United States

PUNTING IN THE MAYFLOWER (HOTEL)—Margaret Snarr demonstrates a rubber emergency boat for Col. A. M. Hertage and Lieut. John Hayes of the Chemical Warfare Service, War Department

A self-sealing gasoline tank for military aircraft . . . truck tires, inner tubes that also close up bullet holes . . . a rubber boat that will inflate almost instantaneously when crews of planes are forced down at sea.

These marvels, developed by the rubber industry for the service of the United States' mechanized forces were arrayed at the Mayflower Hotel yesterday in an exhibit seen by Army and Navy officers and key men from many Government departments.

P. W. Litchfield, chairman of the board of Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., and other company officials greeted visitors who listened to soft music and sipped cocktails while surveying devices to make the Nation's fighting forces more formidable.

Vistors stuck their fingers

Visitors stuck their fingers metal casing of a gasoline tank for military aircraft. The rubber interior, which had been pierced by the same bullets, had sealed itself again.

Nearby stood a "bullet seal inner tube," which will prevent the escape of air from pneumatic tires which have been punctured by gunfire or other cause. The tubes are lined with especially compounded rubber which seals even large punctures and enables the vehicle to continue on its mission. They are being used on motorcycles, scout cars and in various other machines of the Army.

Tires with "especially heavy and secretly compounded side walls," which are capable of operating from 50 to 100 miles after they have been deflated, were lined up in another display booth. "Equipped with tires of this design, the army lorry, gun carriage or scout car can remain in action even though the tires are punctured by gunfire," an official pointed out.

Nearby a yellow rubber boat bulged comfortably—just as it would, in a matter of seconds, after being thrown out from a plane forced down at sea. Even the oars are collapsible, fitting into the small package which the boat forms before inflation.

A huge rubber flotation bag loomed up next in the exhibit. They are designed to fold into the wings of planes that fly over water, ready for instant inflation to support the plane in case of an emergency landing at sea.

Work on a vital frontier—development of synthetic rubber—was displayed by E. R. Rowzee, of Goodyear's research department in Akron. Amid test tubes he compared natural rubber with Chemigum, the new product developed by Goodyear from petroleum and other products found in abundance in this country.

Although the synthetic now costs about twice as much as the natural rubber, by mass production it could be reduced to approximately the same cost if an emergency necessitates a substitute, Rowzee said.

Litchfield in a statement yesterday pointed out that the rubber-growing area in the Malay peninsula and the Dutch and British East Indies is "one of the very hot spots in the game of power politics." He explained that a reserve of 400,000 tons over and above normal domestic requirements is being built up in this country by the Government and by the rubber industry. This reserve, "with the normal inventories in the hands of the industry, would carry us through a long period of curtailed supply," he said.

"Germany, shut off from practically all supplies of natural crude rubber, is producing enough synthetic for all of its war needs, and it is gratifying to know that the American synthetics, particularly Goodyear's Chemigum, are superior in every respect to those developed by Germany," Litchfield said.

Britain Shifts R.A.F. Forces To Far East

tion of it. In the past the British were prepared to placate the Japanese. Once in a while they have stood up to them but it has not been a consistent policy. All the time the British used their old statement of "eyes on the target" and consistently have not allowed their attention to be diverted to the Far East—even if that policy has implied such concessions to Japan as last summer's closing of Burma Road.

Now all is different. The British reaffirmed, when they had no particular reason to do so, their intention of hanging on to Hongkong. Singapore has been heavily reinforced. The new British policy was well illustrated by Menzies' remarks today. It is one of complete firmness to Japan, complete unwillingness to allow a threat of war with Japan to divert them any more. If Japan wants war she can have it, the British say in effect.

"Deeds, Not Words"

This attitude continues despite all today's flood of language from Tokyo. The British refuse to admit that they are exaggerating reports; of seeing tension where no tension exists as the Japanese seem to be suggesting. They are quite willing to take a courteous note for all the things the Japanese say. But at last, the British at the moment at least, have adopted an attitude toward Japan of "deeds, not words."

All the old talk of "moderate elements" in Japan and the necessity of "supporting diplomats against military hot-heads" has now vanished.

It is hard to believe the British have swung around completely in their attitude toward Japan without having had some previous consultation with the United States. In the past Britain has always been influenced by the United States in its attitude toward Japan. Indeed, the most obvious pieces of British "appeasement to Japan" have been undertaken only after the United States refused to back up the British in a strong stand. In at least one case the British gave way to Japan only to find to their utter amazement a few days later that the United States decided to "get tough." Therefore, it is perhaps a reasonable deduction that "parallel action"—that is a diplomat's euphemism for joint action—is functioning, and it would appear, better than it has ever functioned before. It is hardly to be believed that the British, who have always tried to leave the initiative against Japan with the United States, would so suddenly present so strong a front against the Japanese unless they had good reason to believe that the United States was right behind them.

Unofficially, this deduction is echoed tonight by Sir Frederick Whyte, who was political adviser to the Chinese national government and who started in the war as head of the American division of the ministry of information. Broadcasting, Sir Frederick suggested that an Anglo-American blockade of Japan would prevent that country from coming into the war. President Roosevelt's firm stand and the reinforcing of Singapore by Britain and Australia had made for a distinct easing of tension, but the crisis was not yet over, Sir Frederick said.

Sir Frederick spoke unofficially but he voiced the opinion here. The British were inclined to believe that if a strong front were shown to them Japan would not complicate their present war by getting into another.

If she does, Britain is ready for her. Two vulnerable points in the Far East so far as the British are concerned are Singapore and Hong Kong.

As regards Singapore the British are not particularly worried, so far as can be learned. Singapore is one of the strongest fortresses in the world today. The British spent several years in constructing a big dry-dock and naval base there and do not think the Japanese fleet is capable of attacking it by sea on the old principle that ships cannot attack properly manned and equipped shore fortifications. Certainly they do not think the Japanese would try it unless they had first reduced the fortifications from the air.

A threat to Singapore by land is more important. The fortifications were never built for land defense. But apparently the British think they have eliminated that threat—and with the Japanese in Indo-China and Thailand, it is a real threat—by the recent reinforcements of British and Australian troops. That is why they were sent there. Perhaps the fact they have arrived has got something to do with the changed British tone toward Japan.

In respect to Hong Kong the British are equally confident. Again they are ready to stand a land or sea attack, though they perhaps are not so strong in the air as in Singapore.

Anyway, the British point out, the Japanese have never really been shot at. They have had a comparatively easy time in China, it is said here. Their planes never have had to face a modern air force and their troop have never really had to face a modernly equipped army.

Neutral Zone Found Barrier To Blockade

Associated Press Staff Writer

The apparent intention of the American Republics to preserve the Pan-American "neutrality zone" was reported last night to be a major obstacle to the establishment of a British blockade base in the West Indies.

British authorities, believing that supplies from South America are escaping the blockade by shipment through the Far East and Russia to Germany, have been considering setting up a contraband control station at Trinidad or some other British possession in the Caribbean area.

Ship cargoes passing through the Panama Canal from South America into the Pacific would thereby become subject to inspection and seizure in the absence of satisfactory proof they were not destined for Germany.

A contraband base in that area also might become an important blockade weapon against Japan in event of an Anglo-Japanese conflict.

Some authorities fear, however, that the establishment of a base in American waters might bring the war into the Western Hemisphere and might hamper inter-American shipping. In the Declaration of Panama, the 21 American Republics undertook to exclude belligerent activities in American waters by creating a neutrality zone in which hostile acts were forbidden.

The question of a contraband control base was still being considered, but immediate action on the project was not expected.

Navy Fears Spies In Cargo Fleet

Maritime Commission bill providing that radio operators trained at its school be allowed to get jobs at sea without full six months training. He predicted a shortage of operators unless this method was adopted.

Howe, speaking for the Radio Officers' Union, suggested that the Maritime Commission sit in on a union-shipowners conference to work out a plan to permit the commission's radio school graduates to be placed on merchant ships.

"I am pleased to say that it will also enable the Government to divest the merchant marine of the 150 agents of Soviet Russia who are now employed as radio officers on American vessels," Howe said.

Bjorne Halling, representing the maritime committee of the C. I. O., declared he did not know whether any officers of the C. I. O.'s Maritime Union are members of the Communist party or the German-American bund.

Defense Leaks Raise Questions By Roosevelt

By George Bookman
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt yesterday posed the question whether it is ethical, moral and patriotic for members of Congress, the press and radio to disclose defense testimony given at closed sessions of Congressional committees.

He suggested that Congressmen and news executives should voluntarily refrain from disseminating confidential military information—a suggestion that quickly drew from Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, the charge that the President was attempting to "muzzle everybody who is not for war."

The President made his suggestion after reading press accounts of secret testimony by Gen. George C. Marshall before the Senate Military Affairs Committee.

These accounts, the President said at a press conference, were inaccurate and had injured American defense.

Some members of the Senate committee had informed The Post and other news organs that Gen. Marshall had described the Pacific situation to them as "serious" and had said the Pacific fleet was being reinforced by Army and Navy planes.

Mr. Roosevelt said specifically that no compulsory censorship would be imposed without a declaration of war. He pictured the current problem as one calling for voluntary cooperation. Furthermore, he emphasized several times that he was not criticizing the press or radio.

Lowell Mellett, former editor and administrative assistant to the President, said later that no official consideration is being given to a censorship law or official secrets law. He added that the President might, however, take up the matter of voluntary cooperation to suppress confidential military information when he holds his annual meeting with the Nation's editors at the White House in April.

Army, Navy to Decide

From the President's remarks on the subject and from his answers to the many questions fired at him, it appeared that he felt as follows about the problem of keeping secret testimony secret:

That final decision on what is "secret" should be made by the Army and Navy and their commander in chief (the President).

That the responsibility for keeping Congressional confidences rests on the members of Congress and on the press and radio executives, but not on individual reporters.

That since the United States does not have a controlled press individual publishers have a right to decide what is and what is not a vital national defense secret.

That the President was ready to concede, but had no remedy to offer for the fact, that a major problem to be solved is one of uniformity or getting all publishers to agree on what should not be published, so that none would be at a competitive disadvantage.

That a suggestion to publishers, by the Secretary of the Navy, now in effect, that they should not print certain types of military information until it is officially announced was a suggestion that worked pretty well in the World War.

The President launched into his discourse by saying he had read the reports of Marshall's testimony in the morning papers. He cautioned reporters at the outset against writing that the President raised his voice or that he was angry or that his eyebrow curled at a strange angle.

A Problem of Ethics

He said that far from being angry, he was interested in a problem of ethics that he thought should interest the American people.

In a time of world upheaval, the President stated, there are certain types of information that should be kept confidential, in the interests of American safety. And that is why certain defense matters discussed before Congressional committees are disclosed only in executive session.

With regard to Marshall's testimony, the question frankly was whether members of that committee ethically, morally or patriotically ought to disclose to anybody on the outside what was said, the President said.

Secondly, if the committee members do disclose what went on at their meeting it was perfectly obvious to the President that any reporter worth his salt would try to find out the story, either under seal of secrecy or not. It was perfectly all right for the reporter to take his story to the office because that was a part of a reporter's job. The printing of the story or the putting on the telegraph wires by press associations or newspapers represented in Washington presented another very different problem—is or is not the owner or manager or managing editor or the head of a Washington news bureau under the same moral or ethical or patriotic duty not to print a story which has "leaked" from a secret committee session through violation of a confidence?

That is an interesting question, the President said—something that ought to be thought about—and yet he said he did not attach any blame to the newspapermen.

Litvinoff and 3 Other Soviet Leaders Ousted as Failures

Molotoff's Wife Disciplined; Seven Commissars Warned

By the Associated Press

Moscow, Feb. 21.—A new housecleaning by the Communist Party tonight swept Maxim Litvinoff, the former foreign commissar, off the party's central committee and removed Paulina K. Zhemchuzhina, wife of Vyacheslaff Molotoff, present premier and foreign commissar, as a candidate for the same group.

Litvinoff and three others were accused of "failing in their duties." No explanation accompanied the dropping of Zhemchuzhina, as she is known in the U. S. S. R.

Litvinoff, ardent supporter of the League of Nations and the idea of collective security, was removed as foreign commissar on May 3, 1939, and supplanted by Molotoff, who in that year negotiated the non-aggression pact with Germany which preceded the present war.

Was White House Guest

Litvinoff dropped almost completely out of the public eye, although in December of 1939 he was reported to be engaged in preparing digests of foreign policy for Molotoff and Josef Stalin.

Molotoff's wife in recent years has been, successively, head of the Soviet perfumery trust, vice commissar for the food industry and commissar for the fish industry, but she was removed from the latter post late in 1939, and very little has been heard of her since.

In 1936, she visited the United States and was a White House guest.

Litvinoff himself visited Washington in November of 1933 and negotiated with President Roosevelt the resumption of United States-Soviet diplomatic negotiations.

In addition to these changes, the Soviet Party Congress, now in session, warned M. M. Kaganovich, former head of the aviation industry, and six other commissars that they would be ousted from the central committee unless they do better work and fulfill the tasks entrusted to them by the party government. (Kaganovich lost the aviation post a year ago and got a "new post," the nature of which has not been made known.)

MAXIM LITVINOFF

Six Others Warned

The same kind of warning was given to M. F. Denisoff, commissar for the chemical industry; S. S. Dukelsky, sea transport commissar; S. P. Sergueyeff, munitions commissar; Z. A. Shashkoff, river transport commissar; A. A. Ishkoff, present fisheries commissar, and V. V. Bogatireff, electrical industries commissar.

New members of the committee include V. G. Dekanozoff, Ambassador to Germany, and Otto Kuusinen, head of the "Finnish Peoples Government" during the Russo-Finnish war and now leader of the party in the new Karelian-Finnish Soviet Republic.

New candidates for membership include Ivan M. Maisky, the Ambassador to Great Britain, and Gen. George K. Zhukoff, vice commissar of defense and chief of the Red Army general staff.

Controlled Mass Selling Urged For Foodstuffs

Three Agriculture Department economists proposed to the Monopoly Committee yesterday that certain types of mass distribution of farm products be permitted under public regulation rather than be prohibited as monopolistic.

"If to dissolve corporate mass distributors," they said, "leads to an increase in food costs and margins, then we believe public intervention should be in the direction of control of the monopolistic elements rather than their dissolution."

The recommendations were by F. V. Waugh, A. C. Hoffman and Albert Meyers after Louis H. Bean, department counselor, had told the committee that a major means of increasing farm purchasing power would be reduction of distribution costs.

"If large-scale organization tends to promote processing and distributive efficiency and narrow the marketing spread of his (the farmer's) products," the economists said, "he stands to benefit from its extension and is injured by a public policy calculated to penalize it. At the same time, agriculture cannot be insensible to the danger of uncontrolled private monopoly in the marketing of its products."

Suggesting that "what may really be needed is a method of control for an inherently monopolistic or semimonopolistic situation," the group said that this might be accomplished by certain corporations with a semipublic utility status."

They also proposed that in order to prevent duplications of marketing facilities, a system of licensing, involving certificates of public necessities such as has been applied to transportation, might be established.

Discretion in Revealing Facts Urged on Congressmen, Press

By Hedley Donovan.
Post Staff Writer

"Self-imposed restraints" for Congressmen and newspapermen were suggested yesterday by Senator George (Democrat), of Georgia, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, as the answer to the problem of "leaks" from secret sessions of Congressional committees.

The problem came up at President Roosevelt's press conference yesterday, when he was questioned on reports that Gen. George C. Marshall has told a closed session of the Senate Military Affairs Committee that the Army is rushing planes to Hawaii.

Senator Bennett C. Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, foe of the aid-Britain bill, declared that the American people, above all else, should have the pertinent facts."

Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, a leader of the Senate opposition to the bill, said the White House declaration was an attempt to "muzzle the press, the Senators and everybody who is not for war."

Senator Sheppard (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the Military Committee, offered no comment beyond an assertion that "what is told in confidence before an executive session should be held in confidence."

Senator Chandler (Democrat), of Kentucky, a Military Committee member, said there is no doubt Congressional committees from time to time need "confidential information" on defense to aid them in formulating legislation.

"I don't think we interfere with freedom of the press or freedom of public discussion by receiving such information in confidence and keeping it confidence," he added.

Senator Smathers (Democrat), of New Jersey, another member of the committee, expressed fear that the published reports of Gen. Marshall's testimony "would be exaggerated and tend to inflame opinion in this country and Japan." He said Senators "must respect the confidential character" of testimony given in executive session.

The only committee member willing to be quoted in criticism of the closed session system was Senator Thomas (Republican), of Idaho, who said that after a year's service on the committee he could recall "very little, if any testimony that could not have been made public."

"I appreciate that there are matters of technical military information which should not be disclosed," Thomas said, "but Senators rarely ask about that sort of thing and would not repeat what they were told."

Thomas stated that he never divulged any testimony given in executive session, whether of a technical nature or relating to general military policy, but he recommended more open sessions "so we can take the public into our confidence."

'Jean Christophe' Banned by Vichy

Vichy, Feb. 21.—Romain Rolland's "Jean Christophe" is no longer to serve as a textbook in French schools, according to an ordinance issued today by the education department.

Rolland's masterpiece figures in a long list of forbidden books together with various histories of France. The objection seems to be that these history books neglect many centuries of monarchy in order to give greater relief to the French Revolution of 1789.

the concluding speech for the bill, Wednesday or Thursday.

The 3-to-1 ratio of votes for the bill showed no shift during the day, but indications continued that Senate Mihority Leader McNary would lead a substantial bloc of Republican votes to support of the measure.

Senator Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire, a supporter of the bill, introduced an amendment implementing the proposal by Wendell L. Willkie that the bill name the three nations to be aided—Britain, Greece and China.

Bill managers meanwhile were bending every effort to head off support for the Ellender amendment which provides that the bill give the President no "additional powers" to use land and naval forces overseas.

Fears were expressed for the psychological effect of such an amendment particularly in the Far East, even though the proposal had no binding effect on the President.

Indications were that if this, or other major modifying amendments are added to the bill in the Senate, the bill will be shunted to conference to remove them. If the bill passes the Senate without major change, a concurring vote by the House, without change, is expected.

Bulow, in one of his rare but typically homespun speeches, declared flatly against passage, but jested, spun yarns, and for the most part ignored a prepared speech he had sent to the gallery.

The filibuster suggestion was used only in the text of his prepared speech.

"There are two questions before the country," Bulow told the Senate. "First, how the President is going to keep the people out of war, and second, how the people are going to keep the President out of war."

Prefers Appeasement

"Oh, some of you say, we have to go over there and kill Hitler off before he comes over here and kills us off," drawled Bulow. "Well, let us oil up the old musket, keep our powder dry, and get ready, but wait until we see the whites of their eyes before we waste too much of that powder."

Contending for appeasement, Bulow, like Lindbergh, argued that "England and Germany can patch up a better peace now than can be obtained after both nations are exhausted and one of them is licked." Repeatedly, Bulow said he preferred "an appeasement peace rather than total war." Regardless of United States action, he said he was convinced that "the end of Hitler is in sight."

Senator Gillette, who beat back an attempted Administration purge in the 1938 Iowa primaries, told the Senate he was "not ready to gamble all the future security of America on the exceedingly tenuous hope that our assistance will be timely enough to turn the tide."

He said the bill meant "war involvement now and is war involvement now, regardless of our attempts to disguise the facts by self-deception."

The Iowa Democrat said he was ready to "cast my vote for entrance into this war if there is no other reasonable way or method by which to support and defend America and her institutions."

But he said he would not vote for a bill to permit the President "to sit in the international poker game and stake in his discretion, by his judgment of the value of each play, all the resources of the United States, the life, the liberty, the happiness, the security and perhaps the blood of her citizens."

Senator Brooks in his first Senate speech called the measure "a war bill, with war power, with the deliberate intention of becoming involved in not one, but several foreign wars."

He said the measure asked the "same powers that would be asked for if we were actually fighting, shooting, marching, defending our shores."

Brooks said the President should "quit talking about crises and emergencies, and settle down to the solemn fact that we in America must now devote our energies as a matter of course to production and the building of the defense materials so badly needed ourselves, and so badly needed by those we choose to help."

SENATOR BULOW, of South Dakota, in his fourth speech in ten years, yesterday attacked the lend-lease bill in the Senate. "There are two questions before the country," Bulow said. "First, how the President is going to keep the people out of war and second, how the people are going to be able to keep the President out of war"

In France . . . we, too, celebrated Washington's Birthday

Washington's Birthday, Feb. 22, 1941

* * * * *

Today the annual American Legion Banquet in Paris will not be held, nor will the Legion's Color Guard, accompanied by a detachment of French soldiers, take flowers to the grave of Washington's greatest friend—Lafayette.

For now, in 1941, France lies prostrate, conquered by armies three times as large as hers, with mechanized and aviation strength ten times as large.

America's First Friend Lies Prostrate

And her children cry for bread. And they sicken and die for want of medicines. And they look westward toward America, wondering—waiting—asking when we will heed their cry—asking what they have done, these children, to deserve starvation—wondering if, as their enemies say, the great heart of America has dried—if compassion and mercy have left us.

Was it simply because France was beaten? Was it because the truth of her desperate struggle has never been properly told?

Perhaps when you read the truth, you will understand—and here is the truth, brought to you not by propagandists, not by politicians, not by so-called statesmen, but by your own old soldiers; by a group of A. E. F. Veterans banded together to save as many French children from disease and starvation as they can.

THE TRUTH: France lost over 125,000 soldiers killed in the war.

THE TRUTH: Over 1,800,000 prisoners were captured by the Germans.

THE TRUTH: 300,000 French soldiers were gravely wounded.

THE TRUTH: 80,000 civilians were killed, either by aerial bombardment or by machine-gunning on the roads.

This is approximately three times as many people killed as in all air raids over England since the war began.

THE TRUTH: Over 100,000 buildings were destroyed—over 10,000 bridges and tunnels.

THE TRUTH: It was largely due to the heroic rear-guard action of French troops that the English evacuation at Dunkirk was carried out so successfully.

THE TRUTH: Later, after Paris had been taken, and France's Generals had decided that the war could be waged no longer—when more than two-thirds of her war-making industries were in German hands—when roads were glutted by civilians, making proper troop movements impossible—when, in fact, all was lost, irretrievably, irremediably lost,

France held out for eight more agonizing days of slaughter, so that the last British soldier could be embarked for England.

IS THIS THE RECORD OF PEOPLE WHO DESERVE TO STARVE?

Please make no mistake. We are heart and soul behind England in her desperate fight. We stand in admiration—unbounded admiration—of British heroism. We realize that England must win, not only for her own sake, but for the sake of decency in this world.

But that does not mean that France should be deserted! That does not mean that we Americans should stand idly by and see these French children die of slow starvation, of disease and epidemics!

And we tell you there is something you can do, NOW. In unoccupied France are nearly 60 members of the upstanding, God-fearing American organization, the Good Quakers—buying what food they can in Switzerland, and distributing it to the destitute children through their own organization, without interference from anybody.

You see, we ex-soldiers have walked those long roads in France. We've played with the French kids—seen them look up to us with admiring eyes—seen their old folks laboring in the fields for the harvest—drunk a glass of "vin rouge" with them—seen the pictures of young soldiers on the walls of their homes—pictures, many with black crepe on them.

And thousands and thousands of us got our first insight into literature, philosophy and music—from Rabelais and Racine and Moliere—from Voltaire, and Victor Hugo, and Anatole France—then come Pasteur and Roux, Chardonnet, Curie, Bergson—and the music of Gounod, and Massenet, and Debussy and Ravel—and the soldiers, Lafayette and Rochambeau, and the explorers, Cadillac, Pere Marquette, Jacques Cartier.

Americans, think! Must children of this great race die? Must we turn our backs on suffering?

Can we not come to the aid of the people who were our first friends—the people whose devotion to our liberty helped us win that very liberty?

Can we not let them see that we have not forgotten—that by our sympathy and compassion for them we encourage their fortitude to resist the conqueror even longer?

Whether it be a dollar you can afford, or ten thousand, we tell you there is no greater help to Humanity than help to the French children. And the practical way to do it is through the Quakers.

Therefore, we ask your contributions. We ask you to send whatever you can afford to the AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE, 20 South 12th Street, Philadelphia, Pa. We ask you to hurry.

And once again, we thank you in the names of the children whose lives you will save.

150 Million For Defense Housing Sought

Legislation to authorize an additional fund of $150,000,000 for defense housing, doubling the original sum, was recommended unanimously yesterday by the House Public Buildings Committee.

The committee acted after C. F. Palmer, coordinator of defense housing, testified that a survey showed at least 44,900 housing units were needed in 65 areas for defense workers and another 9,520 units in 35 areas for the families of enlisted men in the Army and Navy.

A $67,065,000 program for establishment of a number of "mosquito fleet" and "lighter-than-air" bases was on its way to Congress meanwhile with Navy Department approval.

Chairman Vinson (Democrat), of Georgia, of the House Naval Committee said he would introduce legislation Monday to authorize the work.

Selection of the sites for the bases for torpedo boats and other small craft for harbor defense would be left to the Secretary of the Navy.

Vinson said, however, the Navy had recommended that bases for lighter-than-air craft be established in the Norfolk-Cape Hatteras area at an approximate cost of $5,205,000; in the Boston area at a similar cost and in the San Francisco area at a cost of about $5,905,000.

Auxiliary servicing sites for lighter-than-air craft would be established at various locations, not yet announced, at a cost of about $750,000.

Vinson said the lighter-than-air bases were needed in connection with the Navy's program for purchasing 48 additional "blimps" in the next two years, to be used chiefly for coastal patrol work.

Soviet Biggest U. S. Customer Not in the War

Russia, importing almost $87,000,000 of products from the United States in 1940, was America's largest nonbelligerent foreign customer, according to a Commerce Department report published today.

Only the United Kingdom and France, which purchased large quantities of war materials last year, exceeded the Russian totals, the data showed.

Raw materials and foodstuffs accounted for less than one-seventh of the Soviet Union's imports from America. The remainder consisted of manufactured articles and semi-finished goods.

Large items purchased were wheat, cotton and sole leather, the latter two commodities being used for military purposes, according to general reports.

A strong hint that the American cotton shipments were either re-exported to Germany or fabricated for German use was contained in the department statement that "the Soviet cotton crop is reported as sufficient for mills now in operation in the U. S. S. R. as well as the Polish and Baltic mills." Nevertheless, Russia absorbed $7,864,000 worth of American cotton in 1940.

Another item exported to the Soviet was more than 1,000,000 barrels of nonaviation gasoline.

The department found "an astonishing rise" in the export of refined copper to Russia, and "an unusual" export of seamless casing and oil-line pipe for the expanding Russian petroleum industry.

American imports from Russia last year were valued at $22,274,000. More than half of the imports consisted of undressed furs.

2,007 Planes Shipped by U. S. To British Empire in 1940

By Arthur Hachten
International News Service Staff Writer

America exported 2,007 airplanes valued at $114,495,504 to the British Empire in 1940, chiefly in the last few months of the year, the Commerce Department revealed last night.

To the United Kingdom went 1,376 airplanes valued at $88,020,839; to Canada 539 airplanes costing $18,320,239, and to Australia 92 airplanes valued at $8,154,426, the official record revealed.

In addition there were exported during 1940 to the United Kingdom 1,859 airplane engines valued at $22,450,206. Engine exports to Canada totaled 1,042 valued at $5,339,813, while Australia received 205 engines costing $2,791,122.

Aeronautical products of all kinds, including airplanes, engines and parts, exported in 1940 were valued at $311,757,326, the motive products division of the department announced. Altogether, 3,064 powered land airplanes valued at $170,070,953 were exported.

Before France fell to the German invaders the United States shipped airplanes there. They were valued at $58,400,797. It has been unofficially reported that about 500 of those airplanes were taken over by Great Britain before the Franco-German armistice.

The total of aircraft exported amounted to 3,532 craft valued at $196,352,315. Exports of engines totaled 4,986, valued at $49,873,823.

The wars, of course, made 1940 the banner year in aeronautic exports by the United States. The grand total of aeronautic exports, since they were first reported separately in June 1, 1911, was revealed as $677,606,199 in value, with the 1940 shipments accounting for 46 per cent of that total.

The Gallup Poll

British Survey Indicates Majority Get Usual Sleep Despite Air Raids

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Feb. 21.—A cross-section study of the life of wartime Britain—conducted by the British Institute of Public Opinion—shows that while many Britons are sleeping less than they did before the war, a majority have managed to get their accustomed seven, eight or nine hours per night despite air raids, extra duties and wartime insomnia.

Largest dislocatios in the hours of sleep have come in London and the Midlands, where Nazi bombing activities have sent millions nightly to bomb shelters.

In many provincial areas, however, there has been comparatively little loss of sleep. Indeed, the reduced night life of many towns and cities has probably sent some Britons to their bunks earlier than usual.

To a cross-section of men and women in the United Kingdom as a whole, the British Institute put the question:

"Are you sleeping less than before the war?"

Fifty-two persons in every hundred said "no." Forty-four said "yes"—that they were sleeping less.

About four persons in every hundred said they didn't know, or had been "too busy to notice."

Before the war, British Institute surveys show, the English could be called a nation of eight-hour sleepers.

Seventy-three per cent testified shortly before the war began that they usually slept "eight hours or more."

In the latest check-up, 40 per cent said they were still getting "eight or more."

Since military observers have interpreted much of the Nazi bombing as an attempt to destroy British civilian morale—far more than as an attempt to strike at key industrial targets—the British Institute also asked:

"What are your thoughts when you hear there has been a very heavy air raid?"

Only Herr Hitler himself, probably, can decide whether the reactions are those he has been counting on.

But significantly, only one person in ten said the bombings made him want to "stop the war" in some way.

Far more common was the reaction: "Let's bomb him back."

The chief replies to the question—with the percentage naming each—are as follows:

1. Wonder how the bombed people are getting on—28 per cent.
2. Intensify our bombing of military targets in Germany—24 per cent.
3. Bomb German civilians in retaliation—22 per cent.
4. Get better protection for people in this country—16 per cent.
5. Find some way to stop the war—10 per cent.

Mayors Urge Altering Draft Ages to 18-21

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Feb. 21.—Advisability of drafting men between the ages of 18 and 21, rather than 21 and 35, for Selective Service was suggested today by the Midwest regional meeting of the United States Conference of Mayors.

A resolution said the younger men usually had not begun their business career and had no extensive family or financial obligations, while men in the present draft-age bracket often found it a hardship to leave their jobs, families and other interests for a year of military service.

The executive committee of the mayors' conference was asked to make a study of the problem and to propose such amendments to the Selective Service Act as were "in the public interest."

The War Department was disclosed to have completed detailed plans for the construction of bomb shelters in cities and the protection of civilian populations against poison gas.

Daniel W. Hoan, associate director of the National Defense Advisory Commission's division of State and local cooperation, made the report at a regional meeting of the conference.

Hoan, for 24 years mayor of Milwaukee, said the War Department's work in preparing a comprehensive program of civil defense had not been publicized because "of the danger of stirring up unnecessary and harmful hysteria."

In the matter of bomb shelters, he said, "since it is our hope that we may avoid war entirely, any general construction along this line might lead to the opposite inference."

Hoan reported the civil defense branch of the War Department was preparing a series of pamphlets for cities giving technical instruction on air-raid protection, protective construction, fire protection, the air-raid warning system, blackouts and defense against chemical warfare.

3 Defense Strikes End and 2 Begin

An 11-day strike at the Niagara Falls, N. Y., plant of the Vanadium Corporation, affecting about 400 workers, was settled when the management agreed with the C. I. O. United Mine Workers on a higher wage scale.

Strikers also went back to their jobs at the Foster-Wheeler Corporation, Carteret, N. J., with a contract providing for wage increases. The C. I. O. United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers had called the strike which tied up work by 850 men on defense orders aggregating $305,099.

A contract providing wage increases brought agreement by strikers at the William Powell Valve Co., Cincinnati, to return to work. The strike, lasting ten days, affected 1,000.

Full operations were resumed at the Donura, Pa., zinc works of the American Steel & Wire Co. Some employes had walked out earlier in the week demanding wage adjustments for 42 men. Philip Murray, C. I. O. president, said no strike had been authorized and ordered the men to return to their jobs.

The week-old strike at the Motor Wheel Corporation, Lansing, Mich., caused the Packard Motor Car Co., Detroit, to shut down its plant, laying off 7,500. Officials said supplies of wheels were exhausted. No defense orders were involved in the shutdown of Packard, although Motor Wheel has large defense orders.

The A. F. of L. United Automobile Workers is conducting the strike.

The Fisher body plant at Detroit also shut down because of what officials said was a "slow down." As a result, the Oldsmobile division of General Motors Corporation was forced by lack of materials to suspend work, laying off 2,500.

At Buffalo, N. Y., C. I. O. steel workers began balloting on whether to strike at the Bethlehem Steel Co.'s Lackawanna plant, employing 14,000 and holding vast defense orders. The union seeks a 25 per cent wage increase and claims to have organized 10,000 workers. The strike vote will not be completed for several days.

British Fifth Column Doing Great Job, Says Frenchwoman

By Inez Robb.
International News Service Staff Writer

New York, Feb. 21.—A British Fifth Column, whose exploits outdo fiction or the films, operates with great daring throughout France, Mme. Betty Winkler, Parisian author and editor who has just arrived from her native land, said today.

"Nazi-Fascism may have invented the Fifth Column, but the British have learned how to use it," she said. "Throughout France, the men in this service are known as 'the Heroic Legion.'

"Every section of France has its story to tell. There is the innkeeper in a resort town who recognized, among the German officers staying with him, an Englishman who had often spent his vacations there. The Englishman, in his German uniform, by an imperceptible high sign, warned the inn keeper against any word of recognition."

Before Mme. Winkler left occupied France in December she heard a story of extraordinary daring. It concerned a Frenchman who was driving home when he was stopped by two officers in German uniform who demanded that he drive them to an airport a few miles away.

When the Frenchman demurred, the officers brandished pistols—"an old German trick," according to Mme. Winkler. When they arrived at the field the officers got out, and slipped something into his hand.

The Frenchman watched them walk onto the field, climb into a nearby German plane and take off. When he unfolded the note in his hand it read: "Thank you. Have courage! R. A. F." The Frenchman almost collapsed.

"Where these men come from, or how they come, no one knows; perhaps they drop from the sky," Mme. Winkler said. "Or perhaps they are part of the motorcycle squadrons whose dashing raids have already been reported."

Mme. Winkler says that any French anger at the British at the time of the collapse of France has melted away before Frenchmen's very real admiration for such bravery on the part of "the Heroic Legion."

"But nothing is more amazing than the fishermen of Brittany," she said.

"Those fishermen risk everything night after night to steal out in their little boats with English soldiers or agents. In the Channel, their cargo is picked up by English ships.

"This the men of Brittany do voluntarily. They expect nothing for it, nothing except the eventual hope that once more they will be free if England prevails."

$13,000 Awarded For Auto Injuries

Quarles J. Brown, 25, Government Accounting Office clerk, 1020 Sixteenth Street Northwest, and Belford L. Brazelton, 26, Queens Chapel Road, obtained judgments for a total of $13,000 before Justice David A. Pine in the District Court yesterday.

Attorneys Alvin L. Newmyer, David G. Bress and R. G. Lamensdorf told the jury the men suffered broken legs and other severe injuries the night of February 14, 1937, when their automobile collided with one driven by Paul Aloi, 444 K Street Northwest. The jurors awarded Brazelton $8,000 and Brown $5,000 after a trial of nearly five days.

Farm Cooperatives Get Record U. S. Loans

Federal loans to farmers' cooperatives reached an all-time high last year when the 12 district banks and Central Bank for Cooperatives extended credit amounting to $126,000,000, it was announced yesterday by S. D. Sanders, Farm Credit Administration cooperative bank commissioner.

The amount of credit which was extended, $101,000,000 in loans and $25,000,000 of notes acquired from the cooperatives, exceeds the 1939 total of $86,000,000 by 46 per cent. At the close of 1940, Sanders said, the banks were serving 1,649 farmers' cooperatives.

Shop-Built Housing

The news that the Public Buildings Administration is making ready to close contracts for between one and two thousand demountable houses will be welcome to those who are interested in speeding the national defense effort. For some time the program of the defense housing coordinator has called for the use of these houses wherever it is believed the need for housing will disappear at the close of defense activities. Last fall he recommended the erection of 650 demountable houses at Indianhead, Md. These were to serve as a test to determine the best types and the possibilities in extensive use. Unfortunately the PBA had trouble putting these plans to work and the Indianhead project is among those now pending.

The delay in trying out the shop-built house must be listed among the reasons why, in localities throughout the Nation, defense workers are living in crowded and uncertain conditions or at a distance from the scene of their endeavors. There is little doubt that shop-built housing could be a valuable supplement to other types of construction. Demountable houses are cut to size at the mill and shipped to the desired site, where they can be rapidly put together. It stands to reason that a machine working according to pattern can turn out parts faster than can a man who has to read blueprints, measure lumber, and apply a handsaw to each piece of wood. Milling plants all over the United States might be employed at this work.

The use of shop-built houses would, of course, diminish the demand for labor at the site. One answer to this argument is that the shortage of building workers has in many instances delayed the defense effort. The contention that one is taking jobs away from non-existent laborers would be somewhat tenuous. If it is proved that shop-built houses can be furnished as quickly and cheaply as appears likely, there is every reason why they should be used in many cases of immediate need. Moreover, the fact that they are completely salvagable would eliminate the waste which resulted from our building program in World War I and, therefore, should weigh heavily in their favor. It is earnestly to be hoped that the house manufacturers meeting here in response to the call of the PBA will this time be able to sign contracts.

Defense Financing

The passage of the $65,000,000,000 debt limit bill has given the Treasury the signal to go ahead with its program of defense financing. A special effort will be made to encourage the buying of defense bonds by individuals instead of relying as heavily as heretofore upon the banks. To attract the savings of small investors it is expected that savings stamps convertible into bonds will be sold as was done during World War I. However, and most fortunately, Secretary Morgenthau frowns upon the ballyhoo and high-pressure sales tactics of the World War Liberty Loan drives.

The citizen who buys Government bonds voluntarily in response to noncoercive appeals to his patriotism normally feels proud of being able to help. And this attitude helps to strengthen political morale in times of crisis. But the individual who buys bonds against his will because he feels he must is apt to become resentful and critical of his government. Moreover, if people are coerced into buying Government bonds that they are unable to pay for out of savings, they either have to sell them or borrow to pay for them. That happened during World War I, when people were actually urged to borrow in order to buy. In such circumstances bond sales to individuals result in the creation of new purchasing power (bank deposits) which has the same inflationary effect as direct sales of bonds to commercial banks. In neither case are real savings tapped for Treasury spending.

Now it will be easy to sell defense bonds to commercial banks on credit because they are bought by created deposits which absorb excess reserves. Nor will it be difficult to sell bonds to individuals if they can borrow to pay for them and go on spending as usual. But if the defense program it to be financed without inflation, the billions that are borrowed must come out of current savings—not from bank-created purchasing power resulting from credit operations. Hence every citizen who makes his contribution to the success of the Treasury's drive to enlist individual participation in defense financing is helping to avert the danger of inflationary increases in the general price level. That should be the economic basis of the Treasury's appeal.

End Of Isolation

No policy has ever been more misunderstood than the policy of isolation with which the imperishable name of George Washington is linked. Nine out of every ten Americans still think that Washington warned his fellow countrymen against "entangling alliances." Such a phrase, however, never came from his lips. How could he utter such a warning when he himself relied upon his French alliance to help win the independence of his country? Nevertheless he is, in fact, the father of the policy of isolation, though this policy was intended for adherence only during our infant years.

It would have astonished George Washington to find his Farewell Address invoked as the model of conduct for the mighty Republic of today. Washington was no doctrinaire. He had aims, not methods, in mind. His object was to see that the struggling young Republic should shield itself against foreign domination till union and strength had both been achieved. To that end he would have used any means in his power. Like Lincoln, equally no doctrinaire, he himself had met his emergencies as time and fate dictated, and he wished to see his country follow the same course. It stands to reason that no nation can remain great which does not resolve its problems in the context of its existing situation.

In Washington's time nothing was more natural than that the United States should grow up strictly noninterventionist. Our country was not only a stripling nation as well as a new state; it was so exhausted after the war effort that even the fathers sometimes despaired of recuperation. Externally, too, there was constant danger. The world outside seethed with fierce and unscrupulous ambitions which, in spite of distance, hung over the young America's head like a menacing sword. In all these circumstances a sheltered neutrality was the counsel of common sense. As Seward interpreted the Farewell Address, it was another form of "expressing the idea that the integrity of the Nation should be established, its resources should be developed and its strength, adequate to the chances of national life, should be matured and perfected."

Those who misunderstand the Farewell Address misread the words, let alone blind themselves to the circumstances. The wording of the oration was extremely careful. "It would be unwise in us," the first President declared, referring to the continent of Europe, "to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities." Note the qualifying use of "artificial" in connection with the ties to be avoided. Note, also, the qualification upon the vicissitudes and combinations and collisions of which the young America should beware—Washington referred to the "ordinary" kind. It is extravagant, even without taking account of the change of American circumstances, to see in this sage advice any ban upon entry into, say, a league of nations. And it is equally absurd to invoke it as warrant for diving into a storm cellar when at a time like the present a tornado is sweeping over the entire world, not Europe alone.

But the argument against the applicability of the Farewell Address to present-day conditions needs no aid from a reexamination of Washington's phraseology. The Farewell Address was excellent counsel for our nursling country. It was the shield and buckler of our development. But no statesman till the League debate ever dreamed of invoking the Address as advice for our mature nationhood. In fact, Senator Lodge once said that he would make himself "the subject of derision by quoting from the Farewell Address." It was the postwar turning aside from Europe that made Americans turn back to the famous valedictory as a sort of rationale for an ostrich attitude.

Such a phase, however, is now passing, and we find in the lend-lease debate Senator Vandenberg, a so-called isolationist, "freely considering that isolation—that much bandied and abused word—is impossible in this foreshortened world." Destiny calls America to take a position in this war between two worlds. George Washington would have taken it. He counseled that we should seek out the enemy where the enemy was, and he never waited for him to take the initiative. It is an insult to George Washington's memory that we have allowed isolation to usurp the noble words which exemplified our greatest man of action.

Oh, Music When—

The antitrust suits against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers are technically on a different plane from the concurrent conflict between the society and the radio broadcasters. Yet it is hoped that the acceptance by A. S. C. A. P. of the consent decree, whereby these suits may be set aside, has brought peace in the radio music war a little nearer.

The significance of the consent decree is that it exhibits for the first time a willingness to compromise on the part of the directors of A. S. C. A. P. The decree provides for several radical modifications in the licensing and membership systems. One change even permits individual members to make direct arrangements with broadcasters and other users of music, though it is stipulated that the A. S. C. A P. must remain the free collecting agency. Although these provisions remove some of the obstacles to reconciliation between A. S. C. A. P. and the broadcasters, other obstacles remain. In fact, the principal point at issue, namely, how much the broadcasters must pay each year for the right to use A. S. C. A. P. music, is not touched in the consent decree.

Thus a good deal more of concession and compromise seems necessary before a working agreement between A. S. C. A. P. and the broadcasters can be achieved. Over and above the probable settlement of the antitrust litigation, two factors are likely to expedite such an undertaking. One is the obvious fact that after nearly two months of warfare neither side has won anything like a clear victory. The A. S. C. A. P. seems to have demonstrated that the public on the whole prefers its music to whatever substitutes the B. M. I. has been able to contrive. The broadcasters, on their part, have shown that the end of the world did not automatically follow the withdrawal of A. S. C. A. P. tunes from the ether. The other factor is that the public is now thoroughly sick of the whole controversy.

Expose Or Censor

Many Americans doubtless read with mixed feelings the reports that the Postoffice Department has seized and destroyed more than 15 tons of foreign propaganda sent through the mails. There was general satisfaction that the propagandists had thus been thwarted. But this must have been offset in large measure by the disturbing thought of postal authorities examining mail to determine what is and what is not propaganda.

However, this seizure of "nonmailable matter" does not mean that postal agents have been peering into every letter from other countries. Had this foreign propaganda been sent by first-class mail it would not have been detected, for sealed letters are not subjected to censorship. The leaflets and prints in question were sent through the mails in bundles to foreign agents living here. Thus they could be examined without any attempt to inspect or censor confidential messages.

Such prints have been destroyed, moreover, only when sent here by foreign agents not registered with the Department of State. The Attorney General has ruled that an act of Congress passed in 1938 requires the registration of all foreign agents sending propaganda through the United States mails, even though they may be living abroad. Since failure of these agents to register is a felony, their mail may be confiscated under the postal laws. Agents complying with the Registration Act are still free to send any amount of propaganda through the mails.

Postmaster General Walker anticipates that other propagandists abroad will hasten to register so that they may once more flood this country with lies about the United States and praise for the Nazi and Bolshevik systems. Yet he does not suggest postal censorship to exclude this rubbish. Rather he asks Congress to require that all propaganda thus sent through the mails be properly labeled as such, that copies be filed with the Government, and that the prints contain information as to their source. He also raises the question as to whether the names of persons for whom the propaganda is intended should be required by the Government to be held in confidence.

This country long ago decided that subversive activities here should be handled by exposure and publicity rather than censorship and repression. Mr. Walker's suggestions are in keeping with that policy. Foreign propaganda sent here under the conditions he suggests, with or without lists of the intended recipients, would prove only a waste of money.

LISTEN TO THE WIND!

Who is the victor here, where these dead lie?
Let him come forward, let him now rejoice
In this unhurried flesh that melts to earth
Where only the wind has voice.

From four directions four winds blow
Into the houses—furtive and slow;
Blow against bodies of earth-born men
To drive them back to the earth again.

Flesh into leaves; blood into grass;
Out of their eyes the poppies bloom,
Symbol of sleep—to which they pass—
Deep in the earth's wide room.

Who is the victor? Who the victor here
Where death alone can live to flower?
Listen to the wind as it climbs the stair
To search through an empty tower!

British Propaganda

The pro-British propaganda that has been flooding this country, especially since the outbreak of the war, has become a serious menace to our security. Fewer and fewer people are thinking for themselves, but are on the contrary, unconsciously allowing propagandists to guide them and think for them. The danger of such a trend is obvious.

What course we should follow in this war is open to question. It is up to the American people to make their choice, but a decision should be reached only after deep and careful consideration. The United States is being saturated by pro-English propaganda which is successfully turning our heads.

If we are to cope with this problem with any degree of success we must not allow ourselves to be persuaded and led. We must be cool and rational and make our own decisions. We, not the propagandists, will suffer from a wrong decision.

Disturbed

I am disturbed by the suggestion of those supporters of the lease-lend bill who contend that one of the first Presidential acts, in pursuance of the bill, should be the exchange of some of our fast cruisers and destroyers for some of England's heavy battleships.

The use which has been made of battleships in this war suggests the inquiry: What provision have we for protecting more battleships if we are involved in the war?

Fed Up With Tax Talk

I am fed up—to the gagging point—on squawks about taxes, taxes, taxes. The principal topic of conversation when two or three gather together is taxes—all hands cussing the Government, especially Roosevelt, on any and all occasions when taxes are mentioned.

The country which will probably compare most favorably with the United States in regard to living conditions, as well as taxation, I feel sure, is England, and before the World War of 1914 they were paying vastly more in taxes than we are called on to pay in this country now. Why should we squawk?

I consider it a privilege to pay a fair price for what I get—and I think I am getting a lot for a little.

Isn't it worth something to be able to cuss F. D. R. for every additional penny of taxation without fear of being stood up against a stone wall for a firing squad to shoot at? Or, at the very least, being sent to a concentration camp? I think it is.

Above Materialism

One thing that those overlook who believe Germany will win, and believe we should try to "get along with her," is this: Conscience does not permit us to turn from a task merely because that task is great, nor to avoid a struggle merely because that struggle so taxes our powers as to leave us, for the time, utterly hopeless.

Undoubtedly Germany is winning, for the time being. Undoubtedly she will win final victory, unless our anxious concern for British victory takes the form of starkly realistic action, such as withholds nothing from the British which is necessary for winning this war against enslavement.

If Germany reaches the Suez, and pushes the British from all the shores of the Red Sea and the Mediterranean, and if German, Russian, or Japanese soldiers overrun all India, what, then, will we do? Will we compromise then? Will we set out along another long, losing path of appeasement. Not if conscience still burns within us. Not if we have the courage of our freedom. We shall resist and resist and resist. And we know right now that the British will be resisting and resisting and resisting, alongside us. And if we and the British die as free nations, we shall die together of such courage and honor as shall give the soul of freedom that life which is necessary for its final resurrection. No world of slavery shall remember freedom as a laughing-stock and a thing of shame.

"Put None But Americans On Guard Tonight!"

At midnight, when, through the tented bivouac, there resounded the clamor of the elements, as they fiercely scattered their chilling blast, when all the earth seemed a vast plateau of discord, threatening the army of a small group striving for the most precious possession, liberty, the stalwart and stately general stood amid the clashing forces of encircling desperation, and conveyed the undying utterance of colossal courage as to his despondent and destitute army he exclaimed:

"We are on the eve of an important battle. The destiny of these colonies depends upon its result. Put none but Americans on guard tonight!"

Thus spoke George Washington just before the Battle of Trenton, almost immediately prior to his fateful crossing of the Delaware, vitrified, as it were, by the frozen substance that came as winter's icy breath had fallen and lay upon it. The bleeding feet of his unshod soldiers, unfed and almost unclothed, colored with crimson the erstwhile stainless snow that had spread its unsullied mantle over the fields and upon the housetops. Then forward the insufficiently armed and poorly equipped legions moved to battle with the adversary in the unmatched contest for the establishment of that free and independent Government of the United States, which still retains its pristine power and prestige, even today in an upheaval that ensnares, with menacing ruin, the earth and much that it contains of value and virtue.

"Put none but Americans on guard tonight;" Americans from every clime and of every condition, of many creeds and colors, of a variety of speech and style; all are now Americans, who treasure the traditions that Washington and his compeers so grandly garnished—all are Americans, who guard the gracious gifts of freedom and of justice, and who prize the privileges and purposes of the democratic, as opposed to the autocratic, mode of living—the only way by which manhood and womanhood can progress and prosper.

"Put none but Americans on guard tonight!" This should be the continuous cry, the swelling slogan, upon all patriotic lips, emerging from every loyal breast, as against the clamor and contention of those citizens, both young and old, native and foreign-born, whether their allegiance arises through their origin here or their adoption, by means of naturalization—those citizens who are intelligent as well as those who are ignorant—who dare to complain about the inequalities and inadequacies of a democracy such as ours, that furnishes the fullest favors and the largest measure of opportunity and of security, of liberty and of equality ever granted or guaranteed by any nation at any time since the commencement of recorded events.

In a republic, such as the one that Washington, by his endeavor and endurance, by his service and his sacrifice, assisted so magnificently in molding and maintaining, where property is more evenly enjoyed, where comforts and conveniences are more generously furnished, where wealth is more equitably distributed, where even the lowliest and the poorest are uncrowned kings, with almost unlimited exercise of the most precious privileges, and where labor is rewarded far more handsomely than elsewhere, where there is neither the cruelty of a master nor the tragedy of a slave, we must yet listen to protests against individualism and to pleas for communism and socialism, because, forsooth, there is not that perfect paradise—that extraordinary equality—which has all of the glamour of a dream but which fails when confronted with the realities of life and the deficiencies of human nature, against which no government can grant immunity.

What is it that these reformers demand? Do they insist upon having the Government guarantee them wisdom and wealth—luxury in living and living in luxury? Is it that they would have the Government support the people—an utter impossibility—or, suddenly, transform itself into the pretended perfecter of humankind?

We cannot have all pleasure and no pain. We cannot have all attraction and no repulsion. This is contrary to the law of nature. There can be nothing absolute. All cannot be completely equal. There are differences in minds, as well as in bodies, in emotions, as well as in intellects. There will always be the rich and the poor, the great and the small. If it were otherwise then, indeed, all men would become divine, and the earth would be the heaven of heavens. There is no objection to improvement and advancement in social and economic conditions. Much has already been accomplished. Innovations will always be introduced. If they are rational and practical, they will survive.

Yet to deny the superiority and splendor of democracy, because of defects—even of hardship among certain classes—is to deny eternal goodness because, at times, there are storms, calamities, wars and wickedness upon the earth. Wisely inquires the most patient and observant of all men: "Shall a man have all of the good and none of the evil?" Both must exist, just as other opposites must prevail, so as to insure a properly balanced rather than a maladjusted life.

"Put none but Americans on guard tonight!" This command of Washington should now be translated into the high and heroic action, arising out of an unfaltering allegiance to the grandest Government extant. This should become the vivid and vital realization of our national destiny, as it projects into the distant day, when arms and armaments—when death-devouring battlefields shall vanish and be no more, and all men the God of love and peace shall adore. LEO WEINBERG.

The Post Impressionist

First In Business, Too

COL. HARRY LEE, the son of Washington's "Lowland Beauty," stopped in at Mount Vernon one morning for breakfast. During the conversation Washington mentioned that he wanted to buy a pair of carriage horses.

Lee replied: "I have a fine pair, General, but you can not get them."

"Why not?" asked Washington, falling neatly into the trap.

"Because you will never pay more than half price for anything and I must have full price for my horses."

The jesting reply made Mrs. Washington laugh and her parrot perching nearby joined in with raucous screeching.

The story is symbolic of Washington's care in business transactions. Although he was a luxury loving man, who ordered his silver and furnishings for Mount Vernon from England, who imported his Madeira and who rode forth clothed in a "riding frock of handsome drab-colored broadcloth, with plain double gilt buttons and a riding waistcoat of superfine scarlet cloth and gold lace," he was also thrifty. Unlike most Virginians of his time, he kept his own accounts, posted his own bills and personally supervised his five farms that surrounded Mount Vernon.

Undoubtedly, the halcyon years of his life were those spent between the surrender of Yorktown and his inauguration as President at New York in 1789. That period he spent at Mount Vernon. The years of the Revolution had been disastrous years for him financially. He had taken no pay as a general and had spent much of his private fortune in helping the Colonists win their freedom. Mount Vernon also had suffered severely by his absence. When, at the age of 50, he returned to the estate which he loved so fondly, he entered into the life of a planter with all the zest of youth.

He arose every morning before dawn, lit his own fire and by candlelight answered his ever increasing correspondence. At 7 o'clock his breakfast was served. It was a frugal meal and always consisted of tea and hoe cakes made from cornmeal. Then he set forth on horseback to inspect the work on his farms.

He was, in fact, one of the first efficiency experts in America. He had drawn a map of his estate with the farms and fields accurately numbered. He knew the soil of each field and was a believer in the rotation of crops. His diary, which he faithfully kept from boyhood, is full of agricultural notes. The entry for January 20, 1785, tells us that the white thorn is in berry. In February he transplants ivy. In March he sets out hemlocks. And holly berries are sowed in drills during April.

HE CORRESPONDED with the famous English agriculturist, Arthur Young. From him he obtained seeds and plans for laying out his fields more efficiently. He wrote frequently to Gov. Clinton of New York for balsam and other trees which the Governor might think "curious and exotic." He received from the Chevalier de Luzerne rare grape vines and learned how best to care for them. His days were full and happy.

"I begin my diurnal course with the sun," he wrote to his friend, James McHenry, Secretary of War, in his own and John Adams' Cabinet. "If my hirelings are not in their places at that time, I send them messages of sorrow for their indisposition."

Efficiency is not a new word. It has been singled out recently, though, for a distinction it never possessed in the past. We hear now much about the economy of time and the prevention of lost motion. Washington understood all about that 170 years ago, although he probably did not dignify himself with the high sounding phrase of "efficiency expert."

"Feeling that the work done by several Negro wood choppers was lagging, he sat down one morning on a log with watch in hand and timed them. With his eyes upon them the men quickened their pace. It took, he found, so many minutes to fell a tree, so many minutes to chop off its branches, so many minutes for consultation over how the work was to be done, and so many minutes to hew away the bark and turn the log into a beam. From this computation he knew at the end of each day whether the men had labored faithfully or shirked.

FOUR DAYS before he died he completed an entirely new plan for the cultivation of his farms. It covered 30 pages of large-sized paper and was perfect in detail and penmanship.

From childhood until his death he was constantly employed. He squandered no time, though he fished, shot canvasback ducks, hunted foxes in his woodlands and on the adjoining estate of his friend, Lord Fairfax. He went to dinner parties and danced at every opportunity—once for three hours, "without sitting down" with the wife of Gen. Greene, as the general himself proudly wrote to a friend.

Much of the uplifting vocalising of today is but the feeble echo of a better and much abler man. First in war and first in peace; Washington also was first in applying sound principles to business matters.

In one of his last letters to the Marquis de la Rouerie he wrote: "I never expect to draw my sword again. I can scarcely conceive the cause that would induce me to do it. My time is now occupied by rural amusements in which I have great satisfaction; and my first wish is to see the whole world in peace, and the inhabitants of it as one band of brothers, striving who hearted and really a learned man should contribute most to the happiness of mankind."

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Commander In Chief

THERE WILL COME before the Senate a number of amendments which are in a class by themselves. They do not add anything to and they do not take anything away from the powers granted in the lend-lease bill. They are amendments which seek to make clear that the bill does not mean what some of its critics say it means. The House adopted two amendments of this sort, one saying that the bill does not authorize convoys and another saying that it does not repeal the provision of the Neutrality Act of 1939 which forbids American vessels to enter a combat zone. An amendment will be offered in the Senate saying that the bill does not authorize the sending of an army to Europe.

LIPPMANN

It may be said in behalf of such amendments that since they merely clarify the meaning of the bill —namely that it does not authorize any of these things—why not adopt them all and relieve many sincere people of their apprehensions? The answer is that far from clarifying the bill, they confuse it both here and abroad. For if once you start trying to say all the things that a bill does not mean, instead of saying clearly what it does mean, you could literally go on forever adding amendments. The bill does not authorize convoys. It does not authorize an A. E. F. It does not authorize moving the Washington Monument to Alaska. It does not authorize the infinite number of things which it does not authorize. But if you start saying what it does not authorize, you merely confuse people because you give them reason to wonder whether perhaps something you have forgotten to say is not authorized may thereby have been authorized.

BUT AMENDMENTS of this type are misleading in themselves, misleading to the very people whom they are meant to reassure. They give the false impression that because they do not authorize "convoying vessels by naval vessels," they thereby forbid convoying. They do not. As Mr. Charles Warren, a very high authority in these matters, made clear the other day, such declarations "have absolutely no legal effect" because "Congress has no power to regulate or prohibit the President from exercising his authority as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy to direct the movement of ships of the United States Navy." It cannot be wise, and certainly it is not candid, to create the impression that Congress has forbidden measures which in law it has no power to forbid, and in practice could not effectively forbid.

Certainly it would be a grave decision, not to be taken without separate consideration and consultation, to convoy ships to the British Isles. But at this moment the Navy is almost surely convoying, or something very like it, in the form of patrols and escorts, in other parts of the Atlantic and in the Pacific. No legislative declaration can draw the line clearly for all parts of the world between convoys, escorts, patrols, that may lead to war and those that will not. That decision was left by the Constitution to the Commander in Chief because no legislation can possibly give orders governing the movement and the duties of every warship in the Navy. The Navy cannot be commanded by Congress, and it is much safer not to give the false impression that Congress can, or will try to, command the Navy. Such an unconstitutional confusion of functions will not help to preserve the peace because it may incite other nations to acts they would not otherwise attempt, and it may have very serious consequences in case of war.

OUR WAR with Spain in 1898 provides a classic example of how dangerous is legislative interference with the President's powers as Commander in Chief. A Spanish fleet, under Admiral Cervera, left Cape Verde Islands on April 29, 1898. Twelve days later, on May 11, it was at Martinique, in the West Indies, and on May 14 it called at the Dutch port of Curacao. Cevera was on his way to Cuba. Where was the American fleet? Admiral Sampson, commander of the North Atlantic Squadron, moved from Porto Rico to Key West. Another part of the fleet, known as the Flying Squadron, was operating, under Commodore Schley, off Hampton Roads, Va. Though in fact the Spanish fleet was, fortunately for us, inefficient and inferior to the American Navy, on paper it was not much inferior. It reached the West Indies with our fleet divided.

Why was the American Fleet divided? Not because the Navy wished it so but because Congressmen insisted on it. Writing to Mahan, our greatest naval strategist, Theodore Roosevelt, who had been Assistant Secretary of the Navy at the outbreak of the war, said: "You are entirely right. The Flying Squadron was looked upon with hysterical anxiety by the Northeast and its representatives in Congress. . . . Requests (were) made to me for ships to protect Portland, Me., Jekyl Island, Narragansett Pier and other points of like vast strategic importance, Hale and Tom Reed actually made the President say he would send a ship to Portland. I arranged to send them a Civil War monitor with 21 New Jersey naval militia abroad, which satisfied Portland entirely! It would have been useless against any war vessel more modern than one of Hamilkar's galleys." Had the Spanish navy not been so inefficient, the whole thing might not have been very funny, and Mahan, when he reported for duty at the Navy Department, at once took steps to concentrate authority.

THE AUTHORITY to decide where the fleet shall be, to make the strategic dispositions, is among the most important powers of the Commander in Chief. Wisely used it may prevent war, and it often has: properly used, it is one of the most important elements of preparedness against and preparedness for war. For the best navy in the world, if it is in the wrong place, may be useless to impress a would-be aggressor or to deal with him if he attacks.

That is the reason why in the argument over the adoption of the Constitution, there seems to have been no doubt in anyone's mind that the President must be the Commander in Chief. There was much discussion about whether there should be a standing army. But no one thought that anyone but the Chief Executive could be the Commander in Chief of whatever armed forces Congress provided.

FOR AS WE CAN read in the Federalist, No. 73,

> The President of the United States is to be "Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States." The propriety of this provision is so evident in itself, and it is at the same time so consonant to the precedents of the State contitutions in general, that little need be said to explain or enforce it. Even those of them which have, in other respects, coupled the Chief Magistrate with a council, have for the most part concentrated the military authority in him alone. Of all the cares or concerns of government, the direction of war most peculiarly demands those qualities which distinguish the exercise of power by a single hand. The direction of war implies the direction of the common strength; and the power of directing and employing the common strength forms a usual and essential part in the definition of the executive authority.
> What is true of "the direction of war" is no less true of a condition of affairs, like the present, in which the one best hope of preventing the expansion of the war throughout the world is to convince Japan and her allies of our power—and of our capacity to exert that power—decisively. A divided responsibility, a divided people, a doubt as to whether we mean what we say, will remove whatever hope remains of confining this war to the region of Europe. For it will remove the last inhibition to all-out war all over the globe.

Elmer Revolts Again

Elmer Twitchell snapped off the radio with unusual irritation. "Boy, what wouldn't I give to get a cookie, a smoke, a loaf of bread or something these days that wouldn't fill me with vitamins, give me more pep, shoot me full of vitality, eliminate all aches, protect me against all ills and make a new man of me all around!"

He was quite agitated. "It's got me so I can't enjoy eating any more. These radio fellers have given me the feeling I'm taking medicine every time I eat!

"Take bread, for instance. Now I like bread, and I'm willing to admit it's the staff of life, but I don't think it has all the combined benefits of a month in the country, 10 bottles of blood medicine, a barrel of spring tonic and a swim in the fountain of youth. Yet I never hear any radio station mention any bread without delivering a spiel that makes the old-time patent medicine barker a master of understatement!

"There ain't a breakfast food on the air that I ain't told will fill me with the glow of health, make me immune to winter weather, change my disposition, give me the gusto to work 18 hours a day and make it safe for me to run around in the slush without my rubbers.

"If some program is advertising an apple, an orange, a candy bar, a doughnut, a pretzel or a quart of milk, I'm told in a loud voice that it is the answer to what ails me and the cure for everything from chilblains and asthma to pneumonia, blood poisoning, snake bite and wounds from poisoned arrows.

"Why, mister, there ain't nothin' they don't claim a candy bar will do for you these days. When I was a boy about all anybody would claim for a candy bar was that it tasted fine and was made from wholesome products. Nobody used to tell me that a candy bar was a substitute for a balanced diet.

"Even cigars and cigarettes are announced as having caloric value, some of the vitamins and being a fair substitute for a good steak."

Elmer approached the radio cautiously and tuned in again. "Ask for Boopey's Plug Tobacco," a voice was imploring. "It means release from that all-gone feeling, it means an end to frayed nerves, it makes you immune to the ills of man. Buy a package today and know the benefits of radiant health and happiness!"

"See what I mean!" exclaimed Elmer. "In a minute some station will try to sell me a beer that is full of violet rays and a substitute for wholesome food, clean living and a two-week vacation with pay."

That old cry about millions for defense but not one cent for tribute sounds like small-time financial stuff today.

Spring Offensive

By Harold J. Laski

Hitler Must Strike A New Blow

London.

WEEK BY WEEK, almost day by day, one can see the shape of a German spring offensive taking its determined form. What is interesting, I think, is the revelation, perhaps for the first time since the war began, of uncertainty in the German handling of its objectives. That uncertainty reveals itself in the pretty clear inability to make up its mind about the goal.

Is it to be the long expected invasion of Britain? Is it to be an attack on the Middle East? Spain, to show its gratitude for past favors, by cooperating in an attack on Gibraltar? Is Japan to launch an attack which tests all of America to defend its interests in the Far East? Has France been pulled over the border line of decisive subjection to the Axis? Will Turkey fight? Is the Soviet Union so fearful of a German attack that it will continue to stand aloof whatever the threat of a German advance to the Black Sea may imply?

LASKI

My guess—none can do more than guess—is that none of these and no combination of them at the moment is more certain than another. For the first time since the defeat of Poland, Hitler is uncertain of his next move. Axis propaganda is working overtime to find out, if it can, the weak point in the British armor. So much in the last six or seven months has proved totally unexpected that Hitler waits on the "feel" of events for one of those intuitions of his which looses his barbaric savagery in a new quarter.

He is aware that Japanese intervention which provoked the United States to action might rapidly destroy not merely the nuisance value of Japan but one of the basic causes of Soviet caution. All his temptation for a decisive order to Petain breaks on the knowledge that if French Africa decides to resist, the future of Mussolini is beyond redemption. Without the French fleet, Axis prospects in the Mediterranean are bleak indeed; and the Vichy Government knows that not less clearly than Hitler himself.

HITLER hesitates between these possibilities, and hesitates knowing he must strike. He knows that for three vital reasons. He knows that, first, because in their New Year's speeches he and his commander-in-chief pledged their credit to a German victory in 1941; and it is now over seven months since there was any profound Axis success to report. He knows that, second, because the intensity of the British (and Greek) resistance is beginning to produce real, if whispered, hope in all the occupied and many of the neutral countries. Where an Axis triumph was taken for granted, even at Christmas, 1940, now the possibility of an Axis defeat has loomed on the horizon. He knows it, thirdly, because the sense of the scale and intensity of American aid is beginning to be understood not merely among the German leaders but among the masses of the German people. Neutral observers who have been recently in Germany told me of conversations with sober, middle class Germans to whom now any postponement of rapid victory is the equivalent of certain defeat. They ask themselves why the Fuehrer hesitates. They begin to wonder if he is so certain of his direction.

Something spectacular and determined, he will no doubt attempt. The chance of a negotiated peace has disappeared. He must ruin or be ruined. But he is torn between the possibilities. He knows, as a first rate observer put it to me, that he can inflict conclusive damage. He has seen that his enemies have learned from his strategy. He has discovered (alas, that he has been given a chance to discover it) the difference between the moral fiber of a divided France and a united Britain. He hesitates because in the next six months he has to stake all on his gambler's throw. And if the stake is unsuccessful there looms behind that long shadow of inevitable disaster.

I DO NOT WANT for one moment to underestimate the resources at Hitler's disposal or the power they imply. His gambler's chance of victory must never be underestimated, for it is real and will last at least until American aid for Britain has made the sea lanes safe and has given as something approaching parity in the air. But I do want to emphasize the immense psychological importance of Hitler's own realization that the gap between his own strength and that of Britain narrows every day. That is not a comfortable thought for a man who has always lived on the immensity of the gap and on the terror its existence has implanted in those who ventured to oppose him. Even in the months since the fall of France a good deal of that power to impose terror has gone. Partly, gone because it is clear from the first Battle of Britain that he can be successfully resisted; partly, gone because of the revelation of weakness in the Allies of whom he disposed; partly again, gone because of the growing recognition that he is now at the peak of his strength. If he cannot win today by his own energy, he could only win tomorrow by his opponents' mistakes.

One other aspect of his situation must be remembered. It is, of course, true that he has used the months of triumph to subordinate the economy of the powers he has conquered to German needs. His defeat means ruin for thousands whose fortunes, even despite themselves, are linked with the prospect of a German victory. Yet even with that subordination it is notable that he has not a single psychological triumph to put on the credit side. He conquers physically; he cannot morally subdue. He has no hope of moral subjugation while Britain remains undefeated; and supposing he won the second Battle of Britain he would still have to settle accounts with the United States. He confronts his people, in a word, with an unending vista of wars. There is no halting place at which, even presently, they may hope for a stay to profit from his gains.

HE HAS reached a point, in fact, where defeat is final and even victory is only a prelude to a struggle on a not less momentous scale than the present. Without a rapid victory the seams of doubt already omnipresent in Italy will begin to spread beyond the Alps. A dictator cannot afford doubts; he must be all or nothing. So Hitler must make that most difficult of all decisions, the staking of his whole regime on a single act. He must stake it knowing that never has his enemy been more resolute or stronger. He must stake it knowing also that his whole guess at the mind of Britain was based completely on erroneous premises; he was convinced in August, 1939, that his conquest of Poland meant the certainty of a negotiated peace. That illusion is gone, and with it a good deal of his trust in the advisers who led him to that belief. He has his strength and he has his faith in his star. But he is not certain where he may best deploy his strength; and that suggests that his faith has moments when it wavers. British tenacity will be sorely tried between now and June. But I think it may begin to catch the first gleam of dawn without undue optimism.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

THIS GREAT, hulking, slouchy, emotional Nation is doing itself a great disservice in pretending that the soldiers now under arms and the men who are vanishing from civil life day by day are not training to fight a war, but just camping out for the good of their health and to create the mock prosperity of a boom in certain lines of building construction and manufacturing. The American Army is training to fight a war against a powerful and violently aggressive enemy whenever the national Government decides to strike, and it is folly to assume flatly that if and when war comes, American soldiers never will fight in foreign lands. American soldiers will fight wherever the enemy can be struck most effectively, and there is no need to identify the enemy. There is a remote possibility that unforseen developments will defer, month by month, the decision to strike, and that, taking advantage of this borrowed time, the Nation will develop such strength that the enemy will reform rather than invite defeat.

However, that tempting hope is so unlikely to be fulfilled that it should be eliminated in the interests of national defense and in fairness to the soldiers, who themselves should be given to understand the strong probability of war and deserve the backing of a people thoroughly aware of the danger.

AS TO THE politics of the situation there is ample discussion elsewhere, but that discussion continues to obscure the fact that the military preparation is based on an assumption that the object of all this personal sacrifice by a comparative few citizens, including Park Avenue glamour boys as well as young farmers, miners, students, clerks, factory hands and occupational nondescripts, is to meet the enemy of the United States in war. And comparatively few are making any sacrifice at all.

In civil occupations, wages and profits probably will rise and will be spent for luxurious living, notwithstanding taxes, and it may become necessary to impose artificial or token sacrifices on the civilian—possibly by the pressure of propaganda and public opinion.

For example, Mrs. Roosevelt, who often sends up balloons for the Government, suggested the other day that it might be nice of the civilians to do without new automobiles and aluminum kitchenware and, I believe, also, that the additional wages of the people be invested in Government bonds. Mrs. Roosevelt may speak only her own personal opinion, but it would be foolish to ignore the fact that they are founded on positive information. Her utterances along these lines, therefore, should be interpreted as an alarm.

There is much more doubt of the wisdom of participation in this war than of the probability that the United States, sooner or later, will fight. Even those statesmen who most furiously oppose the legislation which would enable the Government to wage war best are convinced that war is coming —if their remarks be read intelligently. They declare that the bill under discussion will put the Nation into war, and they know in their hearts and the people know that it is going to pass.

If the people are guided by the probability, therefore, rather than by a wish, they will reconcile themselves to the fact that the way to defeat an enemy is not merely to blockade him, but to smash up his cities, make war, hurt his people and destroy his soldiers.

AS MATTERS stand today, neither soldiers nor civilians, except some officers, face the probability. This surely means that if war comes, the fighting men will be surprised and offended and—in the beginning, at least—will fight badly, while the civilians will behave in some misshapen way until they, too, snap out of their daze.

The civilians see few reminders of the preparation. The soldiers are off on secluded reservations, working hard and enduring hardship, and few of them are seen in the cities and towns. In Washington many officers go in mufti for fear that the sight of so many men in uniform bustling around the Government centers might somehow antagonize Congress.

This is no war story. It is up to Congress, not columnists, to make the decision. But the item which could be called the war bill is going to pass soon, and the warning of the opposition that it is a war bill has not been denied except in quibbling and unimportant particulars by those who run the Government and policy of the United States.

Unfortunate Incident

By Mark Sullivan

Publishing Of Confidential Testimony

THE PRESIDENT at his press conference brought up an incident that had occurred the previous day and which he said, ought to have public discussion. The President himself discussed it at length, with much interchange of question and comment between him and the newspapermen. In conclusion he said, as he had said at the beginning, that the matter ought to have public discussion.

SULLIVAN

The facts about the incident: The preceding day the Chief of Staff of the Army, Gen. George C. Marshall, had given testimony before the Senate Military Affairs Committee. The testimony had been in confidence, the meeting of the committee was an executive one—that is, within a closed room, not supposed to be reported. The testimony included military and naval facts and plans, which it is not desirable should be known to foreign governments.

But newspapers the following morning printed—under large headlines, as was appropriate, for the testimony was important —versions and summaries of what Gen. Marshall had said. These accounts Mr. Roosevelt had read, in the newspapers which are his customary morning reading, just before he came to the press conference. He was not irritated; or if he was, as he had much right to be, he repressed the irritation. His manner throughout the press conference was, while earnest, completely patient.

MR. ROOSEVELT recited the incident, and alluded to the parties involved, and their respective responsibilities. Clearly the Chief of Staff of the Army is absolved completely. It is his duty to tell the Military Affairs Committee whatever the committee feels it should know. The role of Gen. Marshall in the incident is that of one whose confidence has not been kept. He, as well as the President, had a just grievance, on behalf of himself, the Army, and the interest of the Nation.

The next group consists of the members of the Senate Military Affairs Committee. Apparently there must be responsibility on them or some of them. (Though Mr. Roosevelt seemed to refrain from impugning them.) One infers that some members of the Senate Military Affairs Committee must have told newspapermen what Gen. Marshall had said.

The next group are the newspapermen who got the information and sent it to their newspapers. These, Mr. Roosevelt seemed to absolve. He said it is the business of reporters to get news and send it to their newspapers, and that they cannot be blamed for doing what it is their function to do.

The next group are the newspapers which printed the information. It was upon these that Mr. Roosevelt seemed to put most of the onus, so far as he assigned onus at all—in general his position was merely that of laying a situation before the public so the public might understand and discuss it.

But the fact is that of the three groups—members of the Military Affairs Committee, reporters, and newspaper publishers—it is the last who are least to blame. Publishers and managing editors receiving despatches over the wire from Washington can hardly, in the hurry of the night, be expected to recognize that a dispatch contains military secrets. Certainly this is so if the correspondent sending the dispatch has not explained the nature of it. Frequently newspapermen get confidential information and transmit it to their home offices with warning that it is for the office only and not to be published. Whether this was done by any of the correspondents in the present case is not known.

ALTHOUGH Mr. Roosevelt, so far as he assigned onus at all, seemed to go out of his way to exculpate the Washington correspondents, the latter did not welcome the exculpation. Rather earnestly, by questions asked of the President by reply and counter-reply, they argued about the President's view, pointed out to him the difficulties that arise in a multitude of situations such as this, not only as respects military information but also diplomatic; and, sometimes, situations that arise in other fields of government.

At the end, with complete good feeling on both sides, the matter was left up to the public to discuss. There this column also leaves it, for the present. It is a situation which is likely to arise with increasing frequency. It brings up the whole subject of newspapers—and also radio, as Mr. Roosevelt added—in time of war. The discussion Mr. Roosevelt has properly solicited will reach out into widespread fields, including the ordinary peacetime relation of Government, and public officials, to the press and radio.

Justice Department to Fight Any Effort To Revive Price-Fixing Technique of NRA

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

The Justice Department antitrust division fears and will oppose a growing pressure among business groups to revive the intra-industry, price-fixing technique of the NRA, it was learned authoritatively yesterday.

The division will fight a program, which it believes is stimulated by the defense effort, to relax the restrictions of the Sherman Antitrust Act and will continue to move against any business group which, acting among its members, seeks to fix prices or establish production quotas.

Several requests from business groups for this permission have recently been received and refused by the division, it was reported.

Government Action Approved

Action to set prices or regulate production by Government purchasing bodies, such as the Army, Navy and Office of Production Management, however, will not meet with opposition from the antitrust division, it was indicated.

Officials recalled that Thurman W. Arnold, head of the division, has repeatedly stated that as long as such action is taken publicly and at the intigation of an arm of the Government, no antitrust law violations would be committed.

If business groups feel that to avoid disruption in industry, quotas must be set on production and if they are able to convince Government buying agencies to set production figures, the division will offer no opposition, it was stated.

In this process mistakes may be made and "uneconomic" arrangements may result, it was explained, but the matter will be of public knowledge and capable of correction.

Would Impose Priorities

The division is also in favor of meeting the problem of price by imposition of priorities under the OPM, rather than by industry agreement, it was said. This can be done, it was explained, by forbidding the sale of a commodity in which there is a shortage, such as aluminum, to any purchaser but the Government, and by having the Army or Navy set the price at which it will buy the article.

The result would be to stabilize price and control production, but under Government supervision.

Arnold is also said to favor the price-control method recently announced by Leon Henderson, defense commissioner in charge of price stabilization. Henderson proposes to determine maximum prices for critical commodities above which sales should not be made, and to make public exposure of those who exceed the limit.

The antitrust division believes, it was learned, that this method of price setting may provide industry with the stabilization it seeks. The division holds that if this method is coupled with a program of indicting antitrust law violators, it should serve to maintain reasonable prices and prevent profiteering on defense products.

Belgian Children Get Extra Carrot

Brussels (via Berlin), Feb. 21 (AP). For thousands of Belgian children the first morning exercise at school these days is to eat a raw carrot.

To children old enough to understand, the teacher explains that carrots contain essential vitamins. younger children merely know that here is a little extra food, welcome after a skimpy breakfast.

Carrot distribution was begun with the cooperation of German authorities. Any child showing a disposition to rickets also gets a little capsule of vitamins.

Ash Wednesday Services To Usher In Lenten Season

DR. FENDRICH DEAN POWELL DR. GRAY

By Robert Tate Allan
The Post's Church Editor

Individual, community and city-wide services on Ash Wednesday of the coming week will usher in Christendom's most solemn season—Lent.

Catholics and Protestants will worship at the various rites that will herald the coming of Easter 40 days afterward, Sundays excepted.

Originally Lent was a fast of but 40 hours' devotions, marking the interval from the death of Christ and His burial in the Tomb of His Resurrection. Then more days were added to it, the number varying in different churches and sects.

Lent today commemorates Christ's 40 days' fast, according to the fourth chapter of Matthew, which states:

"Then was Jesus led up of the spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. And when He fasted 40 days and nights He was afterward an hungered."

One of the principal Protestant Ash Wednesday rites will be at Epiphany Episcopal Church, 1317 G Street Northwest, at 4:45 p. m., under the sponsorship of the Washington Federation of Churches, with the Very Rev. Noble C. Powell, dean of Washington, preaching. As in other years, the federation services will continue on Wednesdays at that hour through Holy Week.

Epiphany's Lenten noonday services also will be launched at 12:05 p. m., with the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, as guest preacher. He was at one time Epiphany rector.

Meanwhile, across town at the Penn Theater, 650 Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast, the Southeast Interchurch Council will begin its 1941 series of Lenten noonday programs, continuing daily from 12 noon to 12:30 p. m., Mondays through Fridays, until Easter. Dr. J. Lowrey Fendrich, pastor of Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, will be the Ash Wednesday speaker. The Rev. Edward Gabler, rector of Christ Episcopal Church, Navy Yard, will preside. Choirs of various congregations will present the daily musical programs.

Chevy Chase Protestant congregation on Ash Wednesday at 8 p. m. will hold the first of six Lenten services, with All Souls' Episcopal Church, Chevy Chase Circle, as opening host. Dr. J. M. M. Gray, former chancellor of American University, will speak.

Masses will be celebrated at St. Patrick's Catholic Church on Ash Wednesday and daily during Lent at 7, 7:30, 8 a. m. and 12:10 p. m. St. Matthew's Cathedral, the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception at Catholic University, Immaculate Conception Church and other places of worship of that faith will hold Ash Wednesday services.

The congregation of Covenant-First Presbyterian Church will have a penitential service with sermon by Dr. Albert J. McCartney, on Wednesday at 8 p. m. The chancel choir will render classic penitential music.

The Brookland Methodist congregation on Thursday will open a Lenten institute. It will begin with supper at 6 p. m., followed by three simultaneous study groups at 6:55 p. m. and devotionals at 7:50 p. m. In the group on "My Church and I," Dr. John R. Edwards, Union Methodist pastor, will discuss "World Service." The group on "Journeys Through Recent Books" will hear Mrs. Orris G. Robinson discuss Heminway's "For Whom the Bells Toll," and the children's group will be led by Dr. S. Paul Schilling, pastor, on "Learning to Live for God."

'The Strawberry Blonde' Puts Earle Back in the 90s

Splendid Cast Lends New Screen Version Of 'One Sunday Afternoon' Quaint Charm; Stage Revue Is Happy, Handsome and Hot

AS AN ACCURATE and antiquely amusing commentary upon the manners and mores of a fabulous era suffused with the violet hues of Victorian virtue, "The Strawberry Blonde," current tenant of the Earle screen, is as authentic as a Sweet Caporal squeegee of a burlesque queen or the ads of the period proclaiming that birch beer probably was best.

BELL

It is in its reflection of the time of your life—if you have lived long enough—when strict social codes, clandestine flirtations and a frenzied foray for funds constituted youth's most immediate perplexities that "The Strawberry Blonde" is preeminent among the major film plays that have gone in for nostalgia in the older generation and surprise, chagrin and a bit of nonplused wonderment in the new. The jitterbugs probably will not be willing to concede that boys and girls ever were like that. Their elders will not willingly make the concession that they ever should have been anything else.

The presently simple, sexy and spontaneous making of a "date" was a pretty ticklish business back there at the turn of the century. You either got your ears slapped down or concluded that the girl was not all that she should have been according to the canons of the times. That is the whole basis of the story unfolded with such archaic charm in "The Strawberry Blonde." The lad who thought he had gotten all the worst of it, on his "blind dates" with the aggressive Hugo Barnstead, finally awakened to the fact that Amy Lind was a better life partner than Virginia Brush, the gay young thing of the title, ever could have hoped to become and so, in the end, everything was even. This youthful correspondence-school dentist, without aid of gas, extracted his earlier rival's tooth "on a Sunday afternoon," with all thoughts of revenge for earlier injustices banished from his mind by what the cinema has come to term a "closeup" of the sorry servitude he escaped by having been jockeyed into marriage with the "wrong girl." It is the familiar story of "One Sunday Afternoon" adorned with new decorations.

And lest the impression get abroad that "Strawberry Blonde" is merely some kind of sociological preachment, it should be made as clear as possible as early as possible that it is, on the contrary, superlative entertainment, set to the tunes that were popular in its purple period.

Done by Paramount in 1933 in far more serious vein, the present screen play, derived from James Hagan's stage piece, goes in principally for dated comedy that packs a lethal wallop—at least for the oldsters in the audience. It has been impeccably cast, if you can accept the word of one who remembers when. James Cagney, Olivia de Havilland, Rita Hayworth and Jack Carson, as the principal figures in the tale of antagonistic interests and impetuous infatuations, are about as "true to type" as any casting director could hope to find. Mr. Cagney never throws a visible fist, but comes up perpetually with a new black eye. Miss de Havilland is the young nurse with advanced notions of "free-thinking" that do not quite stand up under stress. Like Hedy Lamarr in "Comrade X," Miss de Havilland here demonstrates that once given the opportunity she is a comedienne of the first rank. Rita Hayworth, in the title role, is a highly provocative recrudescence of an age when girls were girls, even if they did not dare admit it, and Jack Carson is practically perfect as the shady operator who got to the top by pulling fast ones on all his friends. George Tobias, as Nick, the barber, and Alan Hale, as "Biff" Grimes' amorous ancestor, pitch the high key of the picture's comedy. The remainder of the cast is up to snuff—if there was any such thing as snuff prevalent that many years ago.

For no reason at all, but with fine effect, nevertheless, Harry Anger's stage revue for the new week at the Earle sets itself down in New York's Chinatown. The presence on the bill of the Naitto Troupe may have had something to do with this. The Naittos are Oriental jugglers, gymnasts and tight-wire performers of more than ordinary skill. When those feminine Naittos toss their front and back somersaults on that taut wire, it is something to see. And their sense of timing and suspense is the toughest thing that has happened to the mass nervous system in seasons. Then there is "Hoo Shee"—and one guess is as good as another. We don't know "Hoo Shee," but we know "What Shee." Shee's a sizzling singer who has what it takes, including perfect English diction. But Borrah Minevitch's Harmonica Rascals, minus Mr. Minevitch, are the show-stoppers—thanks no more to their splendid musicianship than to the plaintive comic artistry of Johnny Puleo, that diminutive Pagliacci, who is the pathetic embodiment of all life's frustration. The Rascals never have been better nor Mr. Puleo half so good.

Eileen Ritter's revival of "Sing-a-Song-with-Mike," dedicated to old-time tunes; the new issue of the newsreel and the colorful cavortings of the Roxyettes round out an entertainment that packed them in yesterday and deserves to throughout the week.

The 'Gay Nineties' Technique Was Tricky

RITA HAYWORTH, OLIVIA DE HAVILLAND, JAMES CAGNEY, JACK CARSON as the nice girls and hot young sports of the mauve period at about the turn of the century, celebrated in the Warner Brothers' production of "Strawberry Blonde," now occupying the screen at the Earle Theater. Based on the stage play of "One Sunday Afternoon," this subject deals quaintly with problems of youth that seemed real problems 'way back when

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Feb. 21 (INS).—I have wonderful news for the college boys and girls of America. Frank Capra will make a typical college story for his next picture and he is offering a prize of $10,000 for the best story written by a college boy or girl. "Of course I want to tie up with all the colleges," Frank said, "so that the contest will be carried on in the proper manner. I believe it will also be a fine public relations idea for Hollywood."

PARSONS

I agree with Frank. Think of what it would mean to a boy or girl who is working his way through college to have a check for $10,000 handed him and to get recognition such as anyone associated with a Capra picture always receives.

The rumors that Sonja Henie and her wealthy husband, Dan Topping, had dated the stork, had the Twentieth Century-Fox sfudio in an uproar, to put it mildly. Sonja is due to start "Sun Valley," in which she is supposed to do strenuous skating, the middle of March and naturally there is always danger of a fall, which would never do for an expectant mother. Well, today Sonja put their minds at ease by telegraphing Lew Schrieber from New York that the rumors are absolutely groundless.

Quentin Reynolds puts the same informality into his speeches as he writes in his book, "The Wounded Don't Cry." He takes the audience right into his confidence and talks to them. For instance, he asked if Robert Montgomery were in the audience. Bob answered "here" and Quentin asked him to come on the platform and Bib did, giving a few anecdotes of his own. Maybe he was getting in practice, for I understand Montgomery has been booked for a series of lectures on his war experiences.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Gale Sondergaard is the latest to join the adopted parent group. She has taken Joan Kirstina, 11-weeks-old baby girl, into her home; Katharine Hepburn has enrolled with Arthur Murray for a course of rhumba lessons. Didn't I tell you Katie has become completely humanized? Now, it's Nan Wynn, singer, who is taking Dan Dailey, jr's., time. They were at the It Cafe the other eve; Louise Macy and Jock Whitney were an interesting Ciro's twosome; Hedy Lamarr and Reggie Gardiner spent the evening looking at "Fantasia."

Fay Wray and Raymond Hakim, who have suddenly discovered each other, dining at the Mocambo; the Douglas Fairbanks, jrs., home from their month in New York and Miami, at the Scheherazade with the Basil Rathbones; Nancy Kelly and Edmund O'Brien are honeymooning at Coronado; Sally Eilers and Mrs. Henry Ginsberg took the S. S. America through the canal to New York today. Harry Joe Brown and Henry were at the boat to wave them goodby. David Lewis was on the same boat so I reckon everyone wil lhave a grand time.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Picture Teams Show Increase In Popularity

Keeping steady company is becoming a tradition in Hollywood today, just as it has been in the American small town for generations.

At least a dozen or the film capital's topflight stars are "going steady," these days—on the screen we mean.

Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor, Greta Garbo and John Gilbert were the most famous, perhaps, of these screen teams. For several years, film producers delighted to cast them opposite each other. They just seemed to go together, like ham and eggs, or corned beef and cabbage or beer and skittles.

Four Together

Outstanding Hollywood romantic team at the moment would seem to be Fred MacMurray and Madeleine Carroll, who are currently engaged upon their fourth venture for Paramount under the direction of Edward H. Griffith. "One Night in Lisbon" follows "Virginia," which was completed only recently, and before that they supplied the love interest in "Honeymoon in Bali" and Cafe Society."

Paramont seems to believe with particular conviction in this teaming of stars, for Claudette Colbert and Ray Milland are set to follow up their success in "Arise My Love" in a film version of the stage hit,"Skylark." Bob Hope and Paulette Goddard have made "The Cat and the Canary" and "The Ghost Breakers" together and have another coming up. Hope joins also in another team, that of Bing Crosby, Bob Hope and Dorothy Lamour, now making "Road to Zanzibar" as a follow-up to "Road to Singapore."

Famed Team Ended

Famous among recent teams is that of Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, but that has been broken up, with Astaire moving over to Paramount to do "Second Chorus" with Paulette Goddard for producer Boris Morros.

Myrna Loy and William Powell are carrying on with their "Thin Man" series for Metro-Goldwin-Mayer, while Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy are as perennial as a pair of potted petunias.

Warner Brothers have an outstanding team, too, in dashing Errol Flynn and lovely Olivia de Havilland, while Gary Cooper and Jean Arthur have made a number of films together.

New Combination

Although all have been at the Paramount studios for several years, "Skylark" will be the first time that Director-Producer Mark Sandrich and Stars Claudette Colbert and Ray Milland have worked together.

Leonard Lyons:

New York, Feb. 21.

FRANK KELLY, the London correspondent, tells this story which occurred during London's great fire of last December: The New York Times' London bureau man was reading copy on an important Washington story cabled by Sir Willmot Lewis. Just then the building was hit by a bomb. And while the reporters and charwomen set to work clearing the debris, tending the injured and restoring a semblance of order, a messenger arrived from the London Times, with another cable from Sir Willmot Lewis—reading: "Correction fourth paragraph. Substitute 'Ossa and Pelion' for 'Scylla and Charybdis.'"

LYONS

WHEN THE PRESIDENT decides to establish a home defense board, the most likely candidate for the job of heading it is Bill Bullitt . . . Rodman Wanamaker's post is that of Naval Attache, in London . . . Mark Warnow's concert at Carnegie Hall will cost him $9,000. He plans to do "The Plains of Hi-do-Ho," with a libretto by Carl Sandburg . . . Sinclair Lewis has been a patient at Doctor's Hospital . . . W. Averell Harriman's switch from Washington to London was indicated here on January 13 . . . Ben Hecht—who refused $7,000 a week from Louis B. Mayer, because the producer also demanded an apology for a poem Hecht had written about him years ago—has prepared a column about Mayer. It hasn't been published yet, because Hecht keeps changing it every time he finds new words of attack.

THE CARNIVAL for Britain show at Radio City Music Hall on Friday night was offered the largest array of important entertainers that the town ever has seen. As a fund-raising incidental to this event, a souvenir program was being prepared—for which a group of eminent writers contributed articles . . . Maxwell Anderson contributed a poem, tirading against Hitler. But when the program-proofs were sent to the British Relief Society, of which the sponsoring American Theater Wing is a subsidiary, they were returned with Anderson's poem deleted . . . A producer phoned Mr. Appleby of the British Relief Society, to ask the reason therefore.' He explained: "It was too rude."

LOUIS GRUENBERG, the distinguished composer, wrote the music for the new movie, "So Ends Our Night." This is his first Hollywood assignment . . . Gruenberg confessed that his going to Hollywood was based solely upon a desire to make a living. "But what about the broader aspects," he was asked, "the element of art, the desire to improve the quality of the Nation's music?" . . . "No, none of that. I went there to make a living," Gruenberg reiterated: "I spent a few years writing the music for 'Emperor Jones.' I consider that my best work: The great Metropolitan Opera Company presented it ten times. You know how much I made from 'Emperor Jones'? $660!"

LAST MONTH a Russian Fascist newspaper published an open letter addressed to Station WEAF, denouncing Fred Waring's orchestra for the way he played the former Tsarist anthem. The open letter was written by Boris Brasol, whom "The Hour accused of having brought to this country the forged 'Protocols of Zion.'" He complained that the majestic strains of the Russian anthem had been corrupted into something smacking of ribald jazz. "We strongly protest against this kind of abuse," he wrote, "that its beautiful strains be not converted by cheap music peddlers into ear-breaking jazz tunes" . . . The "Russian Anthem" Fred Waring had played came from the college song book of the University of Pennsylvania. It's the Alma Mater song.

JANE WINTON, the Persian Room singer, auditioned for the Metropolitan Opera last season. Then she obtained night-club engagements and never returned to the Met., until a few days ago when she went there as a customer. During intermission, she read the program—and saw the Persian Room ad featuring her name. "This," she signed, "is the only way I'll ever make the Met program" . . . Bill Martin, head of the New York Stock Stock Exchange, was in Sardi's Tuesday night, where he expressed his delight at being drafted into the Army. "It's tough," he was consoled, "having to give up that $48,000 a year job, to become a private." He replied: "Not at all. After Wall Street, the Army will be great fun" . . . Hugh Marlowe, who plays the "Charles Nathan" role in Elmer Rice's "Flight to the West," was saddened by the notice of its imminent closing. "Maybe," he sighed, "Mr. Rice should've changed the title to 'Pal Moey.'"

MARGARET LOCKWOOD costarred with Rex Harrison in "Night Train," the hit that bobbed up out of nowhere and continues its prosperous run at the Little Theater

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Feb. 21.

The funniest story of the week is about Bob Cummings, who is so in demand that they're working him to death.

HOPPER

He has five loan-out pictures to do away from his own studio, which is Universal. When he told his bosses he needed a rest, which he does, and badly, they said, "Well, what would you do if you had one?" "Go swimming," was the first thing that came to his mind, and he said so. And I'll be durned if they aren't building him a swimming pool in his own garden—but they said nothing about giving him time off to use it.

I wish someone would decide whether Harry Bridges is a hero or a heavy, and take his name off the front page. He gets more space than a movie star or public benefactor. Let's either build him a statue or toss him out.

I hope Laurence Olivier will do better flying across the Channel than he did here. He was so determined to become a pilot that he'd go up for five and six hours at a time. On his last trip to Oakland, he took Vivien Leigh and his instructor along. In landing his Fairchild, he clipped a wing and smashed into a cub plane on the ground, which he paid for. Then bought another cub plane, in which they took off, found they couldn't clear the field, so turned around, tried to land and cracked that one up. None of them were hurt, and story never got out.

When Howard Greer went into the Derby the other day, he came across Madge Bellamy, whom he hasn't seen in a long time, and said, "My, you look so young I thought you were Shirley Temple." Madge took it big, turned to the man who was with her, and said, "Meet Shirley's father." And it was!

When James E. Grant got $62,500 for his original story "Johnny Eager," which will star Clark Gable, he celebrated at a luncheon in the most unusual place. Ask him about it some time.

President James Wood, of Stephens College for Girls, is here to discuss with Frank Capra a sequel to "Meet John Doe." Seems his college has research material on the lives of 305 average women from 36 States, and Dr. Wood thinks the story of Jane Doe is the "forgotten woman" would be a step forward in championing women's rights.

Now I'd like to put in my oar. If Frank Capra, or any other able director, got the facts on what women have done with their rights, in what way they've aided humanity, upped our standard of living, taken politicians out of politics, made fewer divorces, made women and children happier, and the home the center of their lives, and why—then that, to me, would be a great story.

There's no doubt about it—Abbott and Costello are a riot, and "Buck Privates" is making them new friends . . . Darees is up to his old predicting ways again. Says George Raft won't be acting in pictures in two years. He'll either be writing or directing. Raft is already trying to write, but says he can't get it down on paper the way he thinks it. Darees says Cobina Wright, jr., will have a happy future if left to her own devices.

Cary Grant was wondering why Paramount didn't remake "This It the Night"—it was a good yarn. He saw it the other night and said, "Golly! Was I corny—but really awful! I wonder now how I ever happened to make good." That was in 1932—and after the picture, he got exactly four fan letters. But in "Before the Fact" he's a lovable murderer, and goes around killing people just for the fun of it. He's a thief, embezzler, and killer—in spite of which, the gals are mad about him.

William Lyon Phelps, New Haven Sage, Gives His Formula for the Art of Living

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

The art of living, according to William Lyon Phelps, consists of living one day at a time. Some people worry about the past, but more worry about the future. What they ought to be doing, Dr. Phelps says, is heeding the counsel of Our Lord in the Sermon on the Mount: "Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself."

In the space of two hours yesterday, Dr. Phelps gave eloquent point to his philosophy.

The noted 76-year-old author, lecturer and critic, who was a professor of literature at Yale for 41 years, met the day with characteristic exuberance. He received an interviewer and a photographer while lying in bed at the Shoreham with an attack of asthma. He talked with zest about everything, including his asthma.

He talked about actors and ball players, about good books and "trashy" books. Everything seemed to interest him except mathematics. He holds something like 12 degrees, including some awarded him by Harvard, Yale and Oxford, but in mathematics his development stopped at long division. He has difficulty in making change.

"I have no talent for mathematics," he says. "It has never excited me. It has no flesh and blood. Now we are told that two parallel lines must meet in infinity. That's a cold proposition, and anyway the lines actually sideswipe each other. But let's take literature. There is a line in Shakespeare, 'Journey's end is love's meeting.' That's something human, a head-on collision. Do you see the difference?"

Dr. Phelps, after taking a stick of chewing gum for his asthma, got out of bed, arrayed himself in a gay tweed suit, and with a white carnation for his lapel started down to the Shoreham Auditorium to deliver a Town Hall lecture on "The Art of Living."

"I have not had one dull day in the last 15 years," he told his audience, composed mostly of women. "Of course, I had some sad days, some tragic days; but no dull days. I have been an extraordinarily fortunate person."

He said every person, rich or poor, prominent or obscure, could get more out of life than they are getting now.

"I hate to see so many people walking the streets who die 30 years before they are buried," he said. "I hate to see people taking life as a matter of course."

"Remember that everything in life is interesting. Take salt, for example. Have you ever noticed at a dinner that men use more salt than women. Why is that? Play with it a while."

He said the best definition of life he had ever heard was this: "To be is to be in relations." So long as you are in relations with something, he said, you are alive; a dead body is dead because it has no relation to anything. Thus, he said, every time you increase the number of your relations, you increase your life.

Dr. Phelps said that he had no intention of emulating some "old codgers" and saying he had as much vitality as he had as a young man.

"But I have 10 times more mental vitality than when I was 20," he said. "There is no question about it."

The New Haven sage, whose white hair frames a strong, vivacious face, told of the delight he got from reading newspapers. He said he read seven of them a day—five New York and two New Haven—and he said he read them all the way through.

"The first page is filled with failure and defeat, loss and crime," he said. "Well, does that fill us with pessimism? Wouldn't it be terrible if we read that Mr. and Mrs. S——, married three years ago, were still married. Wouldn't that be extraordinary? Life is not a fairy tale. The first page is not pessimistic because every failure is still news."

Nevertheless, Dr. Phelps said, he liked to turn to the sports page because it was a record of victory. He told the Town Hall women that he felt sorry for them if they didn't take an interest in sports, and he recalled how ancient Athens, whose people "reached a higher level of culture" than any people before or since, used to stop everything to enjoy the athletic games. But today, Dr. Phelps said dourly, this is called "overemphasis."

Dr. Phelps played baseball up to the time he was 45, and still goes in for golf and tennis.

Turning to the amusement page of the newspaper, he said the movies were getting better. He recalled how thousands were terrified by the "Invasion from Mars" radio broadcast in 1938, and said that this probably explained the "slush and tripe" that Hollywood had put out. The answer was, he supposed, that people liked it.

In discussing newspaper columnists, Dr. Phelps said he "always read Westbrook Pegler."

Talking about the women's page, he said he was "wildly excited" about the women's hats of today. He recalled a time when women were not so fortunate, a time when they were weighted down with clothes and had to wear a "hat like a roof garden and held in place by spears."

He noted that the hats of today have only one thing in common: they slant either to port or starboard. Recently, he said, he was sitting behind a woman.

"Does my hat annoy you?" she asked.

"On the contrary," he replied, "I think it is very becoming."

He told his audience that he was talking about all these things to emphasize his point: why it is important to be interested in a variety of things.

"When all of us pass through periods of despondency and despair," he said, "don't you see we can't get out of it by will power. You can't say, I'm feeling miserable this morning, but I will be cheerful.' You can't. You can't get out of it by use of will, but you can by diversion."

He said he was always sorry to see a person commit suicide because he was sure if that person had only been able to get through that week, he would have lived for 30 years more.

"You can actually find life interesting," he continued, "even if you have lost all happiness and are never going to have any more."

He quoted a poem by Emily Bronte, presumably autobiographical, which bore out this point.

Dr. Phelps said true pessimists were very rare. He said that a famous one was Jonathan Swift, author of Gulliver's Travels, who wore black and fasted. In talking about Swift, he noted a difference between him and modern satirists. Swift, he said, satirized vices, whereas the moderns satirize virtues and consequently won't last long.

He told of another true pessimist who wrote this inscription for his tombstone before he died:

"Here lies the body of Martin Dodd,
Who lived without a dame;
And all his life he wished to God
His Dad had done the same."

Dr. Phelps then turned to his formula for "The Art of Living"—live one day at a time.

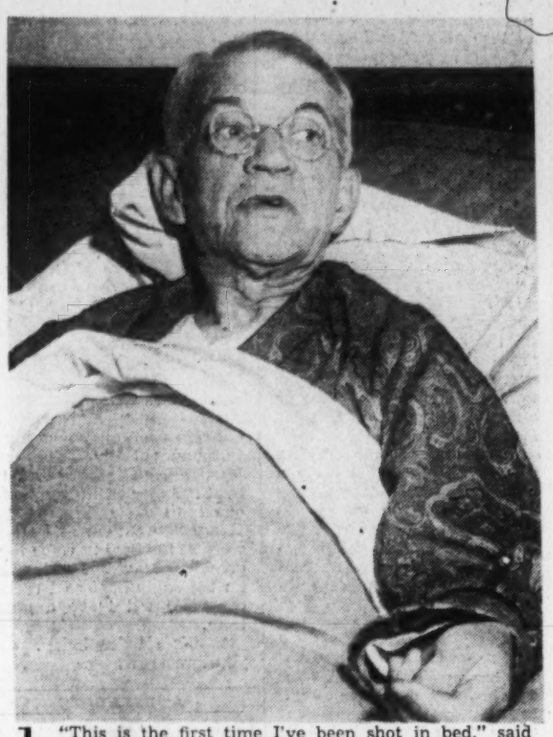
"I almost do it," he said. "You ought to do it."

He recited the famous passage from St. Matthew on "the morrow" and ending with "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

"Don't you worry about the future," he said, "because if you want to worry you will find something today to worry about. The best preparation for the future is to do the thing that has to be done immediately. Some people worry about the past, but more worry about the future. The art of living means here we are, anyhow, and let's get the most out of it.

"We should live every day as if it is the last. I hate anything that is forced. I hate the false enthusiasm on the radio. I don't have to get excited about living. I am excited."

The Town Hall women gave Dr. Phelps an ovation, and many of them, in the words of Mrs. Georgette Ross Howard, the chairman, went away greatly comforted by the knowledge that he didn't like mathematics.



1. "This is the first time I've been shot in bed," said Phelps to reporter and photographer who arrived before he was up

2. An attack of asthma couldn't keep him in bed and Lydia Hubbard, his niece, gave him a carnation to wear to his lecture

3. "I have not had one dull day in the last 15 years," Phelps told his Town Hall audience, composed mostly of women

Author Rebecca Williams' Talk Delights Chevy Chase Club

By Jesse Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor

Nearly 300 members of the Woman's Club of Chevy Chase were present at the meeting of the Literature Section of the club yesterday afternoon to greet Rebecca Yancey Williams, of Richmond, author of "The Vanishing Virginian," who was guest speaker.

They found a merry, modest person, who told entertaining stories at her own expense as cheerfully as she did those about others. The one thing she never intended to do was write a book, she told them.

As the book relates, she explained, her father intended her to be a portrait painter. But this had its drawbacks. She enjoyed the painting but not the comments of the subjects, who, after posing patiently for an hour or two, inspected the canvas and exclaimed, "Good heavens, do I look like that?"

Discouraged with such experiences, she decided to "paint only people's dead ancestors." This, she said, was simple. Nobody got tired of posing and the subject could be counted on for silence. She spent hours at her painting but always reeked of turpentine, and her husband and her son finally asked if she could not "find a hobby that doesn't smell so."

Shifting her interest from brush to typewriter, she began to write of her childhood and youth, depicting her father as a universal American type. She did it as a record for her son she said and was completely surprised when it was suggested to her that she submit it to a publisher and more amazed when it was accepted.

Because she had no idea of being profound but desired to make certain observations, "I tried to speak what wisdom I had, foolishly," she said.

Apparently wisdom foolishly spoken is popular not only with the reading public but also with readers who hear the authors in person. Throughout her talk and the readings from her book yesterday there were bursts of laughter from the audience.

Asked afterward if she were planning to write another book, Mrs. Williams said: "Oh, no. I'm really just a housewife, and I have been so busy answering letters from all over the country since the book came out, I haven't had time for much else."

Countless people have written her saying her father, mother or other members of the family were just like theirs she said, adding, "I haven't been surprised that so many people had families exactly like mine but I have been surprised so many would admit it."

Mrs. Rebecca Yancey Williams (in the lower picture) autographing her book, "The Vanishing Virginian," for Mrs. Edwin Hahn, chairman of the literature section of the Woman's Club of Chevy Chase, at whose meeting she spoke yesterday. Upper—Mrs. Frank L. Weaver is having tea with Mrs. Lawson Moyer serving

She was introduced by Mrs. Edwin Hahn, chairman of the section, who also gave a series of brief book reviews. Mrs. Frank L. Weaver presented a review of "A Victorian Rebel" by Lloyd Wendell Eschelman.

Tea was served following the program with Mrs. Lawson A. Moyer as hostess for the day. The tables were decorated with bowls of red and white carnations and blue iris.

Variety Motif On Next Week's Club Calendar

A variety of events make up the club calendar for next week—a heavy one incidentally. Among them will be the "Quiz to End All Quizzes," scheduled for Monday night at the National Press Club, with the Women's National Press Club participating.

Geneviere Forbes Herrick will head the women's team with Sigrid Arne, of the Associated Press, Frances Parkinson Keyes, noted author; May Craig and Emily Newell Blair as the other members.

Tomorrow night, at 8 o'clock, there will be an informal story hour at Alva Belmont House, headquarters of the National Woman's Party, where Mary Agnes Best, widely known storyteller, and author of "Rebel Saints" and "Tom Paine" will entertain members and guests The recital will be in the drawing room of the historical house, before an open fire.

The author is here from New York doing research at the Library of Congress.

The Congressional Club has issued invitations for a reception on Friday afternoon from 5 to 7, honoring Sam Rayburn, of Texas, Speaker of the House.

Another event of interest will be the annual founders day banquet of the Hollins College Alumnae Club o. Washington, to be held at the Kennedy-Warren Monday night

The club, of which Miss Harriet Ann Jackson is president, is making plans to cooperate next season in the observance of the centenary of the founding of Hollins.

The Woman's National Democratic Club has announced Attorney General Robert H. Jackson as guest speaker for its weekly luncheon at the clubhouse, 1526 New Hampshire Avenue, Monday at 12:30.

76th Club Plans Luncheon to Honor Mrs. Roosevelt

The Seventy-sixth Club, whose membership comprises wives of members of Congress who came in with the Seventy-sixth session, has issued invitations for a luncheon honoring Mrs. Roosevelt, which will be held March 20 at the Kennedy-Warren.

Mrs. Luther Patrick, wife of Representative Patrick, of Alabama, is president of the club, and Mrs. Jerry Voorhis, wife of Representative Voorhis, of California, chairman of the luncheon.

Madame Chairman

By Suzanne

A GARDEN TOUR into the Deep South is planned by four Washington women, headed by Mrs. Leslie H. Whitten, of the local branch of the American Association of University Women. Others are Auguste Boas, Mrs. Francis Fannon and Mrs. Lawson A. Moyer.

They plan to leave March 19, traveling down the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, across the Great Smokies of Tennessee to Natchez, Miss. There they will have as their personal escort, the president of the garden clubs of Mississippi, Mrs. W. H. Merritt, who is Mrs. Whitten's sister-in-law.

After viewing the lovely homes of Natchez, Elmscourt, Melrose, Cherokee, the Briers and many others they will see many famous plantations of Mississippi and Louisana. They also will be present at Natchez to see the Confederate Pageant and will be guests at a candlelight reception at Elmscourt, the "House of a Thousand Candles." They will also have the pleasure of hearing Negro spirituals in an old church.

From Natchez the four go to Baton Rouge, where they will visit the State capitol and university. A three-day sight-seeing tour in New Orleans with a special guide will include many places of historic interist, famous eating places and as a grand finale, the spring fiesta.

Returning home they will take the Gulf Coast Route by stopping by Pascagoula, Miss., to hear the Singing Waters, go to Pass Christian, Biloxi and to Mobile to see the Bellingrath Gardens. Here are thousands of azaleas, camellia japonicas and dogwoods.

After Mobile come the Ravine Gardens of Palatka, Fla. In this garden alone are 2,500 dogwoods, 787 native magnolias, 1,000 Bougainvilleas, 2,000 crape myrtles, 2,000 flame vines, 2,250 Japanese magnolias, 1,000 camellia japonicas, 2,000 Cherokee roses, 11,000 palms, bays, pines and hundreds of trees, shrubs and flowers of other varieties.

From there the party will go to Flagler Beach, up the coast, to view the famous Marine Studio at Marineland. Spend a day in Jacksonville to see the Oriental Gardens as a forerunner of the last stop on the trip—the Charleston (S. C.) Gardens. Here they will see the Magnolia, Middleton and Cypress Gardens as the high spot of their three-week tour.

WEEKEND GUEST—Miss Harriet Virginia Vought, who is spending this weekend in Washington as the guest of Dorothy Pletcher Howerth, is well known in the New York banking world. After graduating from Wellesley College in the 20's, where she majored in economics and had one of the best academic records in the school, she attended Columbia University and obtained a master's degree.

As an undergraduate at Wellesley Miss Vought never lost an opportunity to describe to any who would listen the fascinating side of the banking business. So it was no surprise to her classmates, a number of whom live here, that after college she soon found her way into this field in New York. After a few years of banking experience she entered the investment service department of the Chase National Bank, and is engaged in investment research on industrial securities, which she describes as an excellent field for college women to consider as a profession.

Being the daughter of a prominent lawyer, and having a leaning toward that profession too, she entered New York University several years ago. She was consistently at the head of her law classes, and emerged with her LL. B. Last year she was admitted to practice in New York.

Miss Vought takes an active part in several legal fraternities She is now serving as recorder for Phi Delta Delta, women's legal fraternity, and is a member of the New York chapter of Theta Sigma Lambda, honorary legal fraternity.

Other clubs in which Miss Vought is active are: The Association of Bank Women, the Women's Bond Club of New York, the Academy of Political Science, the American Woman's Association, and the New York Wellesley Club.

SCHOOL TEA—Mrs. Harold E. Warner, director of the Cynthia Warner School, entertained informally at a silver tea for the patrons and friends of the school yesterday from 4 to 6 o'clock.

Mrs. Caroline Stephen, president of the Temple Secretarial School; Mrs. Frank Finch, president of the Elmira Club, of Washington; Mrs. W. J. Furman, jr., chairman of the Washington Federation of Private Nursey Schools; Miss Margaret LaFetra, director of the nursery department of Beauvoir, National Cathedral School; Mrs. R. H. Harmon, wife of the school physician; Mrs. Charles W. Harnsberger, Mrs. Ernest S. Griffith and Mrs. Dewey D. Ellis, all present patrons of the Cynthia Warner School, assisted at the tea table.

Arlington Club To Hold Benefit

The annual benefit dance of the Arlington County Welfare Club will be given at the Washington Golf and Country Club this evening from 10 to 1. Proceeds will go to the Arlington County Tuberculosis Association.

Authors Back Locke Lecture

The Author of Books for Children Club will sponsor the lecture recital to be given by Miss Florence Locke, "the artistic legatee of Ellen Terry her daughter Edith Craig," which will be held at the Hotel 2400 Monday at 8:30.

The following members of the Big Sisters of the Metropolitan Police Boys Club will be the ushers; the Misses Molly Stonestreet, Mrs. Basil Pearson Cooper, Achsah Dorsey, Marjorie Hendricks, Patsy Kelsey, Patricia Hill, Virginia Pennington, Betty Wright and Mary Morris Wright.

St. Joseph's Parish to Mark Golden Jubilee

Founded during the days of the Civil War, historic St. Joseph's Catholic Parish on Capitol Hill tomorrow will commemorate its golden jubilee.

The Most Rev. John M. McNamara, Auxiliary Bishop of Baltimore and Washington, will preside at the mass at 11:30 a. m. in the edifice at Second and C Streets Northeast, and the Right Rev. Monsignor Thomas A. Rankin, Vicar General of the Diocese of Richmond, will be celebrant.

Other participants will be the Very Rev. Monsignor Lawrence J. Shehan, of St. Patrick's, preacher; the Revs. J. Jennings Clark and James I. Bifield, deacon and subdeacon, respectively, and the Rev. Walter J. Schmitz, S. S., of Suspician Seminary, Catholic University, master of ceremonies.

Both St. Joseph's and St. Peter's, the latter at Second and C Streets Southeast, have long been landmarks on the Hill. By coincidence, their rectories have identical street numbers—313 Second Street. Both have had their territories cut away by the encroachment of Federal and other buildings, including the present Union Station, the Senate Office Building and the Supreme Court structure.

James Cardinal Gibbons, as Archbishop of Baltimore, dedicated the present S. Joseph's Church on January 18, 1881, and laid the cornerstone of the original edifice in 1868, just after being consecrated Vicar Apostolic of North Carolina.

Modern Maternity Hospitals Leave Psychiatrists Cold, Too

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, Feb. 21.—The streamlined maternity hospital, with its glass-inclosed germ-free room, with long rows of babies carefully numbered, carefully segregated, may be the latest word in baby care, but it isn't the last word!

According to the psychiatrists at their current national convention here, this system of having babies in modern safety is only a compromise. It is the best way known of guarding mothers and babies from the dangers of childbirth infection, but they pay for this not only in terms of the high cost of this kind of care but they pay in human terms.

The days are over when the most strictly regulated hours of feeding, the freedom from human contact except at specified and rare hours, was considered ideal. Psychiatrists and pediatricians today say that it is best for a baby to be fed—oddly enough—when it is hungry! Hunger in a very young baby is just discomfort from the contractions it feels. But it soon learns something from the feeling of satisfaction it gets when fed. That is the first step.

And the doctors say it is more important, this satisfaction, and the gradual connection of satisfaction and confidence with food and mother than the Spartan conception of regularity and impersonality that stood until lately "for training." Mothers and nurses cannot say any more with pride "I have broken the baby of its 2 o'clock feeding." Babies apparently are not colts. They are not supposed to be broken at all.

A mother has to learn to recognize the difference between her baby's cry that just means "I want attention" and the one that means "I am hungry." But with the best intentions, how can she do this in a maternity hospital with the baby a half block away, its cry drowned in those of a dozen other babies? It's going to be some time before baby gets any response to a cry other than a nice sterile rubber-gloved hand of a masked nurse.

A modern hospital is hard, too, on the confidence of a mother who has just had her first child. Those incredibly efficient nurses! How will she ever be able to take care of the baby herself! How accomplished the technically proof handling; how remarkable those clock-like infinite details! She will be scared to death when she has to take the baby home. How does she know that her baby will survive, if it isn't carefully weighed before and after each feeding?

"Well, it's the best we know so far," one psychiatrist said. "But it starts the mother and the baby off with an abnormal relationship." Another added, "And shamelessly, too! What it amounts to is 'I can give you anything but love, baby!'"

Hobby King Here to Pursue A Favorite—Washingtoniana

Chalmers L. Pancoast is a hobby fan who isn't satisfied with doing one thing at a time. He's got 29 hobbies and keeps them all going at once.

Pancoast, New York hotelman, is here to observe Washington's birthday because things connected with the first President are among his hobbies—such as his collection of bricks from old buildings which figured in Washington's lifetime.

He freely admits he is the champion of hobby fans and said it all started some years ago when he went on the road for his hotel. Since then, Pancoast has traveled many thousand miles in nearly every State.

His latest hobby is the collection of labels for his luggage. He has 11 suitcases covered with all types of labels and seals. He said his label collection tells a romantic story of adventure across and up and down the country.

"Hobbies," said Pancoast, "become particularly exciting when they can remind you of adventure and romance. Every label on my bags brings back memories of some adventure I have encountered on the road."

Here are a few of Pancoast's favorite hobbies: Collecting commemorative George Washington stamps, dime novels, Buffalo Bill posters, bars from jail windows (from the outside), old or new circus programs, menus from eating places, old-time convention badges, ancient American coins, pictures of "horse and buggy days," verse on cub reporters, rare "friendship tokens," old American newspapers, "Gay Nineties" songs, and political campaign canes.

Pancoast also is founder of the "Wear a Flower a Day" Club, which he promotes in the various cities he visits.

Chance to Aid Religion Seen In Providing for Selectees

(Editors note: The recent National Christian Mission's emphasis on greater Christian service has prompted The Post to invite discussion on how to make the modern church more effective. The feature begins today.)

People of all faiths have a golden opportunity for Christian service by helping provide for the spiritual and physical well-being of Selective Service men in nearby camps.

That is the opinion of Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer, pastor of Mount Pleasant Congregational Church.

"That will be a great opportunity for the various religious faiths to demonstrate to these young men that their churches have not forgotten them," commented Dr. Buschmeyer, adding that "the day will come when these men will return to their normal civilian activities.

Steps Taken to Aid

"Their impression of the church and religion," said he, "will be greatly conditioned by what the church and religion have done for them during their Selective Service days."

Dr. Buschmeyer explained that already steps have been taken toward aiding the Selective Service men. A committee of laymen was organized at First Baptist Church under the leadership of Walter Lawton and Dr. Thomas Wilson, and has conferred with Jewish and Catholic laymen on the problem. The committee has been trying to interest other Protestant laymen in the project.

Dr. William R. Barnhart, new executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches, feels that in such programs as aiding Selective Service men, social welfare, hospital work, youth activities and weekday religious education the Protestant churches can do their most effective work through unity of effort.

Explaining that large sums were going to be needed to carry out a program for the selectees, he said the project could be facilitated through a central agency, such as the Federation of Churches.

Demonstration of Unity

Further commenting on the value of united church effort and declaring that the recent National Christian Mission demonstrated what united Protestantism can do here, he said:

"The only church that can cope with totalitarian evils is a world church. How can Christian brotherhood extend across the borders of a war-torn world unless it can extend across the denominational lines of Christians?"

Dr. Barnhart said that "when the world is breaking apart, the church must be a unifying and not a divisive factor." "One of the most optimistic facts of our times," he said, "is that while the world has been disintegrating there has been greater progress toward Christian unity."

Diplomatic Teas Draw Throngs of D. C. Society

Two diplomatic teas yesterday kept society on the jump en route from Sheridan Circle to upper Massachusetts Avenue. Mme. Ertegun, wife of the Turkish Ambassador, and Mrs. Ralph William Close, wife of the South African Minister, both had friends in.

The embassy, which is just off Sheridan Circle and overlooks Rock Creek Park, was jammed with friends of Mme. Ertegun who came to pay their respects at her first "at home" of the season. Receiving with the hostess was Miss Ismet Sinli, Turkish newspaperwoman. Young and pretty, she is writing a series of political articles, a rather difficult thing to do these days, she admits. Miss Sinli is also getting out a novel and is staying in Wilmington, Del., while working on it.

Mme. Ertegun and her guest welcomed the company in the drawing-room of the embassy, where fire blazed on the hearth. The hostess had chosen a floor-length of dark brown velvet, with a jeweled brooch. Miss Sinli was in black, street length, with embroidery on the collar.

Vases of red and white roses were placed in the drawing room. The tea table was set up in the long hall of the embassy and was centered with an enormous cluster of calla lilies. Among the delicacies served was a very sweet Turkish pastry. Then there were platters of thin sandwiches and huge cakes.

Party Is for 'Women Only'

Mme. Ertegun's party was a "women only" affair. Among those who called were Mrs. Wayne Chatfield Taylor and her daughter, Rose, who wore a becoming Scotch cap with her fur coat. There were several other mother-and-daughter combinations present. Mrs. Keith Merrill came in with the Misses Eugenia and Rosemary Merrill, who wore leopard skin coats over their frocks. Mrs. John Caswell had with her her debutante daughter, Miss Peggy Lansdowne. Mrs. Caswell poured tea, pretty as a picture in pale blue wool frock and a sand-colored sailor.

Others who took a turn at the tea table were Senora de Recinos, wife of the Minister from Guatemala, who wore a red hat with her black velvet dress; Mrs. Eames MacVeagh, Mrs. George E. Allen, whose smart costume was topped off with a little feather hat; and Miss Sinli.

Many guests at Mme. Ertegun's party went on to Mrs. Close's. Mrs. Sol Bloom and Miss Vera Bloom picked up the Misses Patten to give them a lift up Massachusetts Avenue. Mrs. Bloom wore a silver fox jacket over her dress.

Mrs. J. L. Houghteling compared notes with Mrs. Edgar Prochnik, who wore a little white fur hat with her outfit. Mrs. Houghteling was in a dark green suit edged with black fur.

Many Call On Mrs. Close

The flower arrangement at the South African Legation were particularly attractive yesterday. There were several tall vases filled with white calla lillies interspersed with clusters of red berries. The hostess wore a floor length gown of lace.

Among those pouring tea was Mrs. W. C. Naude, of the legation, who topped off her frock with an off-the-face hat trimmed with veiling. Robert Webster of the staff was also on hand to see that everyone had a good time. The punch served was made from South African wine.

Mrs. William O. Douglas, wife of Justice Douglas, arrived with Mrs. A. K. Helm, wife of the First Secretary of the British Embassy. Mme. Lombard was present, wearing a dark green wool coat with a fur collar and a little hat perched over one eye.

Mrs. Hamilton Fish said that her debutante daughter, Miss Zeva Fish, had gone to Palm Beach to join her father for a vacation. Mrs. Fish wore a brown ensemble.

There were men as well as women at Mrs. Close's party. The Minister was on hand to greet the guests, and many women arrived with their husbands. Mme. Molekamp, wife of the Commercial Counselor of the Netherlands Legation, was present, wearing a white carnation pinned to her black fur coat.

Others who called were Mme. Hassan, wife of the Egyptian Minister; Miss Carolyn Nash, Mrs. Merchant Mahoney in a blue flowered hat and black dress; Mrs. McCeney Werlich and Miss Lelia Peachy.

Mrs. Wickard's Honor Guest Is First Lady

Mrs. Roosevelt was honor guest at the luncheon given yesterday by Mrs. Claude Wickard, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, in her apartment at the Westchester. Attending the luncheon were Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, wife of the Vice President; Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State; Mrs. Frank Walker, wife of the Postmaster General; Mrs. Jesse Jones, wife of the Secretary of Commerce; Mrs. Paul H. Appleby, wife of the Undersecretary of Agriculture; Mrs. Paul V. McNutt, wife of the Federal Security Administrator; Mrs. A. G. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a Palmino beige dress made with a matching jacket and a wide-brimmed crushed felt hat of the same shade with a black mesh crown. A corsage of brown orchids completed her costume.

Edgar Stubbs, jr., twin brother of the bridegroom, was best man. Immediately after the ceremony the couple left for a motor trip in the South. Capital Whirl

By Sally Swift

BARON JAMES BAEYENS is optimistically planning for spring, and even summer, not one bit discouraged by these icy February gales. The other evening when he and Baroness Baeyens entertained informally at dinner, Baron Baeyens was describing the little farm which he has rented in nearby Maryland and which he intends to make a sort of headquarters for his friends who like to spend their spare time in the country.

The farm was the home of Sherry McAdam until he was ordered to the U. S. Embassy in London as Assistant Naval Attache, and it was Sherry who began asking his friends of all ages out for picnics and informal baseball. Baron Baeyens, who is amiable and falls in with his friends' plans as easily as he invents plans of his own, has taken over the farm with the pleasant idea of continuing Sherry's hospitality. This does not mean that Baroness Baeyens will have a house in the country to run as well as the house in Georgetown. Her husband is looking after all the details of spring cleaning and furnishings and Mary Baeyens can relax and enjoy being the most honored guest.

AT DINNER the other evening Baroness Baeyens wore a gown of turquoise blue chiffon. She looked most effective against a gold background of Japanese prints as she presided over her crystal and gold decorated dinner table. Several of the feminine guests had also chosen to wear blue which added to the pretty effect. Dainty, blonde Mrs. Leonide Ourusoff wore palest blue lace. Mrs. Carey Crane wore robin's egg blue crepe and Mrs. Robert Pell wore an Empire gown of black crepe embroidered in turquoise beads.

Other guests were Mr. and Mrs. George Howe, she in honey-colored satin; Countess Baillet-Latour in green and gold lame; Robert Pell, Leonide Ourusoff, Maj. Lawrence Higgins, and Col. Carey Crane. The Cranes and the Baeyens are old friends having been stationed in Japan at the same time. Col. Crane was Military Attache at the U. S. Embassy in Tokio for several years and is now at the Army War College.

THAT THE soothing charms of music are effective on civilized as well as "savage breasts" was proved at George Abell's party the other night when dignified figures of the Capital's diplomatic and political life discarded their cares and sang old songs to the accompaniment of a strolling accordion-player. Besides charming his guests with music, and no one is ever so charmed as by the music of his own singing, Mr. Abell offered them a delicious buffet supper and sparkling wine. The flowers, arranged under the supervision of the host, were especially beautiful, and even little niches in the walls were filled with fragrant blossoms.

MRS. HENRY DOWNE, who has recently come to live in Washington after making her home in Paris for the past 27 years, will soon be off on a lecture tour for the benefit of the Red Cross. Her itinerary will include the South and West and will take her all the way to California.

A friend, who very much admires the sculpture done by Senhora de Martins, wife of the Brazilian Ambassador, was urging her the other day to present some of her own work as a door prize at the tea which she is arranging for the benefit of the Red Cross. Senhora de Martins modestly refused, on the grounds that most people would be more interested in a lovely gown as a prize. So she has procured something very special in the line of couture and hopes that one of Washington's beautiful ladies will win it.

Anthony Balasy, who was one of the Capital's most popular bachelors when he was stationed here as Counselor of the Hungarian Legation, is being welcomed back by his friends. Mr. Balasy has been on post in London at the Hungarian Legation but recently resigned and will make his home in America. At present he is staying at the Fairfax.

Another diplomat well known to Washington who has resigned his post in London is Radu Florescu, formerly of the Rumanian Legation here, who, with his attractive red-haired wife, preferred to remain in England when the British recently broke off diplomatic relations with Rumania.

Notes of Society

Official and Residential

The British Ambassador and Viscountess Halifax and the Cuban Ambassador and Senora de Concheso were guests of Mrs. Cordell Hull at tea yesterday afternoon. Later, Senora de Concheso left by train for Miami, Fla. From there she will go by plane to Havana to spend three weeks. When she returns to Washington she will be accompanied by her two small children, Aurelio and Maria Teresa.

Mrs. Carlos Del Mar, who had planned to entertain at a luncheon yesterday, had to postpone the party because of illness. She hopes to give the party some time in the next few days. Mr. and Mrs. Del Mar recently returned from a trip to Florida.

Mrs. Robert H. C. Kelton, who left on Thursday for Aiken, S. C., will return to Washington early in April.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest E. Walker gave a dinner at the Shoreham last night in honor of their subdebutante daughter, Miss Will-Ann Walker. Guests were Miss Jean Staiger, Miss Cynthia Phillips, Miss Patricia Tramble, Miss Jean Oliver, Don Buckley, James Kavanagh, Robert Anderson, Newell B. McDevitt and Ernest L. Thompson.

Mrs. Arthur Clarendon Smith and her recent house guest, Mrs. Thomas Bilodeau, of Boston, Mass., left this week by motor for Miami, Fla., where they expect to spend a month.

Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Rumbold of the British Embassy entertained at a small dinner last evening.

Mrs. Demarest Lloyd will leave soon for New Orleans where she will spend a few days before going on to Mexico City.

Mrs. Robert Edwin Peary who has been the guest of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Stafford is now in New York with Mrs. Stafford to attend the annual dinner of the Society of Women Geographers. From there Mrs. Peary will go on to her home in Portland, Me.

Mrs. Lacy Honors Mrs. J. H. Lewis

Mrs. James Hamilton Lewis was guest of honor at a luncheon given yesterday at the Carlton Hotel by Mrs. Sterling Byrd Lacy.

Mr. and Mrs. Lacy will leave tomorrow to return to Leesburg, where they have a home. They came to Washington several weeks ago to spend the late winter season and have been at the Wardman Park.

Dance Honors Betrothed D. C. Couple

Residential society gathered at the staid Sulgrave Club last evening for a dance in honor of Miss Nancy Leiter and Thomas Clagett, who will be married today at the Leiter home on Dupont Circle. Hostess at the party was Mrs. Joseph Leiter, mother of the bride-to-be.

A hundred friends of the young couple sat down to dinner at the club, and 150 others dropped in later to dance to the music of Meyer Davis, with the conductor there in person. Mr. Davis will also play at the wedding reception today.

Several Dinners Precede Dance

Several smaller dinners took place prior to the dance. Dr. and Mrs. B. Lauriston Hardin had a few friends in at their home in Georgetown and Joseph Alsop was also a host.

Mrs. Charles Thomas Clagett, mother of the bridegroom, and his sister, Miss Elizabeth Clagett, who will be a bridesmaid, were on hand for the festivities. Mrs. John R. Williams, the bride's grandmother, was also present.

Others included Miss Patricia Prochnik, who came on after her engagement at a local night club; Mr. and Mrs. E. Kenneth Jenkins, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Burling, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Jasper DuBose, James Wimsatt, who will be best man, and Mrs. Wimsatt; Mr. and Mrs. Gale McLean, Mr. and Mrs. Yelverton Garnett, Mr. and Mrs. John Newbold, Mr. and Mrs. Corcoran Thom, jr., Miss Peggy Lansdowne, Countess de Baillet Latour and Miss Elaine Darlington—to mention but a few.

Climax of Crowded Calendar

A recently engaged couple present were Miss Louise Stillwell and Randall Hagner. Others included James Parks, Samuel Biddle, James Mitchell, Mr. and Mrs. Robinson McIlvaine, Harry Covington and Rufus Johnston.

The bride-elect's brother, Thomas Leiter, was among members of the family present. Also there were Colin Campbell and Miss Marion Oates, of New York, among the many out-of-towners here for the wedding.

Last evening's fete climaxed a crowded calendar of prenuptial parties given for Miss Leiter and Mr. Clagett the past few days.

The wedding will take place at 12:30 p. m. today with Msgr. Edward Buckey officiating. A hundred guests have been invited for the wedding, and a number of others will come in for the reception afterward.

A Hat Shape for Every Face

By Jane Driscoll
The Post Fashion Editor.

Hats are safe and sane this spring. The woman seeking a practical chapeau will find a wide variety of becoming shapes. For those who want brims, there are sailor varieties, visor adaptations and the perennial brimmed classic. Those who want to face the public will like turbans or off-face styles. For the in-betweens, the postilion shapes are the answer. At right are sketches of spring basic styles, below are the adaptations

The sailor hat comes back to town this spring. Casting no aspersions on the wearer, "Wallflower" is the name of this little sailor of pale blue wallpaper pique by Walter Florell

The visors are still coming for all-around wear. They were popular for resorts. Now shapes like this white straw John-Fredrics hat with navy blue grosgrain edges are news

To bare the brow or cover it wear a turban. This one of purple chiffon by Sally Victor is built on a beige silk and wool cap with novel orange raffia trim

A little straw bonnet for an off-face mood is the thing. Actress Ann Morriss wears this red straw by Simon Millinery. There is a double band of navy ribbon inside

For that last century feeling try a postilion hat. This high-crowned felt by Harryson is as feminine as lavender and old lace. Sheer veiling anchors it securely beneath the chin

Call it the Latin-American look or a Caballero Casual. This wide gaucho-brimmed Knox hat is still one of the perfect classic styles. It comes in beige with pecan suede sash

Plan Wedding DetailsCarefully

SO YOU'VE said yes, and now there's a wedding to plan for! Of course you want it to be the most glorious moment of your life, so start early to settle every little detail of dress, etiquette.

Shall it be formal or informal—a church or home affair? Up to you to decide which you prefer and can best afford. Both can be lovely.

At a formal flower-decked church affair you wear the traditional sweeping bridal gown and veil and carry a bouquet or prayerbook. The groom wears morning coat and striped trousers in the daytime, white tie and tails in the evening. And of course your attendants dress in key—bridesmaids in flowing dresses, ushers and best man in attire like the groom's.

Your family will have expenses connected with the church to pay for—organist's and sexton's fees and floral decorations. And you're expected to send engraved invitations to all your friends.

But an informal home wedding can be charming, too. You may wear a flattering afternoon dress and hat, perch a corsage on your shoulder. The groom wears a business suit and the one attendant you're each allowed will dress informally, too.

Bowls or baskets of flowers from your own garden, perhaps, create a lovely bridal atmosphere, while a friend may play the wedding march. You invite guests by personal note and send announcements to those you haven't room for.

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, How to Plan Your Wedding, to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth Street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

Washington Took Active Interest In Details of Running His Home

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

It is as a gallant but remote statesman that America reveres George Washington and celebrates his birthday this month. But personally we delve into old books for remembrances of George Washington in his more genial role as squire of Mount Vernon and master of his household.

And master he assuredly was, for he it was who ordered from his London agents the beautiful fabrics for furniture coverings and draperies at Mount Vernon, who selected the furniture and even made arrangements for buying a mangle he saw in a Philadelphia home. Detailed instructions for a new mantel, the plan of the garden, all come under his wide interest.

First Ice Cream Freezer

Washington's diaries, orders and bills include a minute record, in his own fine handwriting, of the furnishings and upkeep of his home. On his retirement from the Presidency, the place required a good deal of remodeling. He wrote:

"We are in the midst of litter and dirt, occasioned by joiners, masons, painters and upholsterers, working in the house, all parts of which, as well as the outbuildings, are much out of repair." Again he notes in his diary the first record we have of the ice cream freezer on May 17, 1784. "By a cream machine for ice £1.13.4."

Another domestic scene of Washington's home life describes Martha Washington's concern with giving Nelly Custis music lessons. Mrs. Washington gave her lessons on the harpsichord and copied herself a large book of music for Nelly, for music was difficult to get in those days before mass production printing.

A Lesson in Manners

Mrs. Washington did not spare her pupil, making her practice often in tears, but both she and Nelly were rewarded by Gen. Washington's gift of a fine harpsichord, costing $1,000, which is still to be seen at Mount Vernon.

Another story of Nelly Custis relates how she and some girl friends, who were visiting her, came to breakfast in curl papers and wrappers.

No comment was made till some young officers were heard at the door and the young ladies jumped up to run away and make themselves more presentable. Mrs. Washington intervened, maintaining that if their appearance was good enough for Gen. Washington, it was good enough for guests.

"George," said his Father, "do you know who killed that beautiful little cherry tree yonder in the garden?" Looking at his father with the sweet face of youth brightened with the inexpressible charm of all-conquering truth, he bravely cried out, "I can't tell a lie, Pa; you know I can't tell a lie. Mary Haworth's Mail

After One Month's Courtship, Boy of 20 Declares His Love for Girl, Who Says She Can Give Him Only Friendship; Must He Accept This as Final?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a young man 20 years old and a junior in college. About a month ago I met a girl at church who impressed me very much. Since then, I have been going out with her twice a week and we seem to get along well together. I had hoped we could continue our friendship through my college days and beyond. As a matter of fact, I had begun to dream that perhaps a few years after I had graduated from college we might get married. In my opinion, she is the ideal girl.

However, she told me the other night that while we could always be good friends, she would never love me. What I wish to know is this: How can a girl say she "never will love" a certain man? Do you think that if our friendship continues, it might develop into love, in spite of what she says? What can I do to make her look upon me as more than "just a friend?" Could it be that she regards all boys as friends, and not as sweethearts or potential husbands? Please advise me soon. Sincerely, U. V. A.

DEAR U. V. A.: In consenting to go out with you twice a week, since your first meeting, the girl has indirectly given you a brand of encouragement that somewhat belies her statement that she can never love you. In affirming the possibilities of permanent friendship, she has given you sufficient encouragement, indeed, to warrant your clinging to the hope that you may yet win her,—providing, of course, you yourself don't lose interest in her, long before you are economically "fixed" for marriage.

It is not uncommon for a girl, in the first flush of a new courtship, to say and actually to think (at the time), that she doesn't—and never will learn to—love the earnest young man who is pining for her favor. And the young man's chances of winning her are considerably lessened if he takes the "turn down" seriously, in melancholy or faint-hearted spirit. What he should do is dismiss the discussion instantly and lightly, saying, in effect: "Okay, darling, if that's the way it is, I don't want to annoy you. But we're still friends, aren't we? So let's leave it on that basis, and just go on being the very best of friends,—and maybe, some day, you'll change your mind."

Having put himself on record as wanting her love, but being perfectly capable of surviving, even cheerfully, without it,—he should treat her thereafter simply as a good friend, with little or no sentimental fervor evident in his attitude toward her. Supposing they continue to "date," with this kind of "understanding," it probably won't be long before the girl will be shyly and hopefully trying to win another serious statement from him. It is typically feminine for a girl to be elusive, noncommittal and even sweetly discouraging, when being pursued—and equally feminine to become something of a huntress herself when a personable pursuer shows signs of relinquishing the chase.

You ask how to make this girl, whom you have known for one month, "look upon you as more than just a friend." You can only do it—if at all—by proving yourself to be an utterly agreeable, trustworthy friend, whose companionship and thoughtfulness gradually will become so pleasant a part of her existence that after a while she would "feel lost" without you. And this means, of course, that you should be prepared to "stand by," as her friend, without special or tender encouragement from her, for months and even years to come. M. H.

Men Teachers Helped This 'Backward' Pupil

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Some years ago I was confronted by a problem similar to that reported by "Mrs. U. D." in your column of February 19. I, too, was extremely concerned over my 14-year-old son's failure to get passing grades in school. After we moved to Washington, I learned of the Woodward School for Boys, at the Y. M. C. A. It isn't an expensive school, and the classes are small and conducted by men. My son enrolled there and began making astonishing progress,—for him. His whole attitude toward his school work improved.

When the time came for high school, I realized,—as you told "Mrs. U. D." about her son,—that he needed men teachers. I was successful in placing him in McKinley Technical High School, where he loved the shop work and got along splendidly with his teachers. He entered into all kinds of school activities and did well in each. Incidentally, the music teacher there, a woman, Mrs. Thompson, affectionately known to all the boys as "Ma," gets remarkable cooperation from students in her classes.

It occurs to me that "Mrs. U. D." might care to investigate these schools,—in case your suggestion that she take her problem to the Child Guidance Clinic of the Washington Institute of Mental Hygiene doesn't appeal to her. Sincerely, F. G.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Betty Field's Diet Program Not for Copy

By Ida Jean Kain

IF THERE is the faintest tinge of feminine perversity in your make-up, you may get good and tired sometimes of hearing about the Hollywood stars, Broadway actresses and Manhattan models who take their exercise with such exemplary regularity and always count every little calorie.

In that case, you'll like Betty Field—she does not deliberately do a single solitary thing you could copy. Not if you want a lovely figure. And, oddly enough, you'd expect her to be a shining example because she has lovely proportions. Here are the statistics: Weight, 112 pounds for height of 5 feet 4 inches; bust, 33 inches; waist, 24 inches; hips, 33 inches.

She hates exercise, she says. But being of a conscientious turn of mind, she tried to fall in with the film colony's practice of playing tennis. "I'm told Ginger Rogers plays every daybreak before going to the studio. And I thought it might make me full of pep and glamour, so I hired an instructor and started in. It was awful. I'd go home and spend the rest of the day in bed."

Meals Tailored for Guests

Her slant on diet is just as bad—from the figure standpoint. She plans the main meal to suit whoever happens to be coming in for dinner. "When mother comes over, I have her high protein diet. She is trying to lose weight. Then a couple who have dinner with me occasionally like veal cutlets and chocolate souffle. When I go out I like Chinese, Turkish or Italian food."

All that sounds as if Miss Field were just naturally slim, doesn't it? And, conversely, that you might be just naturally fat.

But looking into her mode of living a bit more closely, we find that she has just completed a picture "on location"—which means getting up at 3:30 or 4 a. m. Also, the parts in which she is cast seem to call for action as well as acting. In this particular picture, our lovely star took the part of a mountaineer girl who went around barefoot and spent most of the time running up and down hills. Of course, she doesn't consider that in the light of calisthenics.

Betty Exercises After All

She doesn't diet, but for breakfast she has tea and toast; for lunch, something light like salad or fruit and cheese; for dinner—well, we went into that. The point is, she gets so few calories in the first two meals that she can eat as she pleases for the evening meal without getting fat.

To wind this up: She does get exercise. She loves to ride horseback, even in the winter when the snow is on the ground—"the horses look very surprised!"— but she likes to ride so that doesn't count.

Washington's Birthday to Be Honored Here

Two 11-year-old pupils of E. V. Brown School, John Gentzer and Audrey Millang, dressed in the powdered wigs and gay costumes of George and Martha Washington, yesterday knelt in the schoolyard beside a silhouette portraying Washington in prayer for his country at Valley Forge.

The city with the first President's name, likewise will honor Washington today on the 209th anniversary of his birth. Activities will be widespread, with highlights, as follows:

9 a. m.—Placing of a wreath at the Washington Monument by the Masonic Clubs of the city.

10:30 a. m.—Gen. James A. Drain, assistant administrator, FSA, will speak at the Monument in ceremonies to be joined in by 100 patriotic groups under auspices of the National Park Service and the American Legion.

10:30 a. m.—Exercises at the George Washington Masonic Memorial, Alexandria, under auspices of Alexandria Masons.

10:45 a. m.—Sir Gerald Campbell, British minister, to speak in Memorial Continental Hall at the twenty-seventh joint celebration by the D. A. R. and Sons of the Revolution.

Ashurst to Talk

11:30 a. m.—Former Senator Ashurst, of Arizona, will address the Association of Oldest Inhabitants at the Old Union Engine House, Nineteenth and H Streets Northwest.

Noon—Meeting of the District of Columbia Society, Sons of the American Revolution in the Mayflower Hotel. William Alexander Miller, formerly of the Congressional Library, will speak.

3 p. m.—Masonic exercises at Washington's Tomb, Mount Vernon.

6 p. m.—Masonic dinner, George Mason Hotel, Alexandria.

Holiday for Government

Government departments will observe a full holiday; most of the department and specialty stores will close half the day. Many of the larger stores will close at 1 p. m., while some of the men's and women's clothing stores will close at 2 p. m. Coal and fuel oil merchants will close one half-day. Chain grocery stores will remain open all day, but will close all day Monday, the 24th. Most wholesale food distributors will keep establishments open today.

The parade, held annually in Alexandria on February 22, will be attended today by Gov. James H. Price, of Virginia, and Joseph C. Menendez of New Orleans, commander-in-chief, Veterans of Foreign Wars. Menendez will address the organization at 7:30 p. m. today in the George Mason Hotel at a national defense banquet.

Senator Capper (Republican), of Kansas, in the Washington's Birthday broadcast for the United States Flag Association, last night called for national unity. Referring to the decisions America soon must make, Capper said the Nation then should "forget our differences—let us bury our hatchets—and give our chosen leaders our united and unqualified support. Let us all, each and every one of us, join hands in the great brotherhood of Americanism, presenting to the outside world a solid, united, invincible front, a perfect bulwark of national unity."

Mrs. Doyle Speaker

The E. V. Brown school children yesterday were reminded of Washington's words—"To prepare for war is an effectual way of preserving peace"—in a short address by Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the Board of Education. Many blessings Americans enjoy today are directly attributable to the first President, she said, urging that the pupils study his life closely. The children have placed a large silhouette of Washington in the schoolyard. It will be illuminated each night.

The Iowa State Society of Washington will hold a Washington's birthday anniversary party and dance, from 9:30 to 1 a. m. tonight at the Shoreham Hotel.

Washington Would Resist Dictators, Descendant Says

Principles Inspiring Revolution Are Held In Danger Today

By W. Selden Washington
Great-Great-Great-Grandnephew of George Washington

Alexandria, Va., Feb. 21 (INS).—I celebrate George Washington's 209th birthday today not to honor my forebear but to join with 135,000,000 other liberty-loving Americans in paying tribute to the man who founded our country and laid the basis for its perpetuation.

Washington's stature grows as the years go by. Not only did his daring political experiment develop into the greatest democracy in the world—a Nation unique among, and the envy of, all other nations.

Our first President also laid down certain basic principles a century and a half ago that have as much, or even greater application, to the problems that beset us today.

Were Washington alive today he would see that the world holocaust of 1941 is really not so different from that earlier American struggle of 1776. He would see new weapons, new methods of combat, streamlined techniques to break morale and weaken resistance. But the basic issues that caused men to fight then, and for which they are ready to give their lives today, are the same.

In 1776 the Washingtons, Von Steubens, Haym Solomons, Kosciuscos, Patrick Henrys and all the other diverse peoples that made up the original colonies, were struggling to throw off the hegemony and the hatreds of Europe.

In 1941 Europe is again trying to establish its hegemony and insert its hatreds into America, and the descendants of these brave men are just as determined—this time not to gain, but to maintain—their independence.

Were Washington alive today to see the totalitarian dictators attempt to create a "master race" and enslave the free peoples of the world, to regiment whole nations and turn them into subservient goosestepping robots, he might repeat those famous lines from his farewell address:

"May heaven continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence, that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual; that the free Constitution that is the work of your hands may be sacredly maintained; that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue that the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it."

To the dictator-ridden lands where truth is "decadent," where the "big lie" is an instrument of propaganda and government, where paganism, immorality and the spirit of anti-Christ are preached in 1941 as never before in history, Washington's message to the members of the new church in Baltimore rings clear:

"We have abundant reason to rejoice, that, in this land, the light of truth and reason has triumphed over the power of bigotry and superstition, and that every person may here worship God according to the dictates of his own heart.

"In this enlightened age, and in this land of equal liberty, it is our boast, that a man's religious tenets will not forfeit the protection of the laws, nor deprive him of the right of attaining and holding the highest offices that are known in the United States."

When we were children at school we were taught that George Washington was "first in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen." Washington was and always will be first in the hearts of his countrymen because he was not feared but loved; because he believed not in bigotry and falsehood, but in freedom, and truth and God.

So long as we adhere to these principles laid down by the Father of Our Country, the hate-mongers and bigots will never take over America, and we will never suffer the tragic disunity that has brought chaos, misery, fear and war to other parts of the world.

sors the campaign for the Blood Bank.

Fifteen other legion parties are scheduled for the benefit of the fund, with seven more being planned.

Dr. T. Edward Jones, director, Freedmen's Hospital, yesterday raised the question in a letter to The Post whether the Blood Bank campaign might benefit adults as well as children. Although the bank, served in this campaign, is located at Children's Hospital, calls are received and answered there from other hospitals where adults are in need of transfusions.

A community party at Falls Church, Va., in the Madison School building last night brought adults and youngsters to play table games and group games, for the benefit of the fund. Mrs. Robert Landreth and Mrs. Joseph McCaskill served as cochairmen.

About 100 persons attended and approximately $125 was raised for the fund, it was announced.

Another group of Falls Church citizens met at the home of Mrs. J. R. Branson to play bridge and to add to the fund.

Vincent B. Costello Post No. 15, of the legion, has planned a variety of events. At a card party at the home of Louis Korn, 1612 Kenilworth Avenue Northeast, for the executive committee, $20.25 was raised Tuesday evening, it was announced yesterday. Another party is being given at the home of Dr. John W. Dudley, 1200 Delafield Place Northwest tonight.

Commander W. O. Baker, of Pepco Post No. 43, announced yesterday that a donation is being raised by employes of the Potomac Electric Power Co.

corporation. A few months later the courts gave the cooperative a clean bill of health.

Garfield Hospital did, however, for a time permit Dr. Selders to bring and treat his patients there in emergencies, under temporary dispensation. This policy was terminated when it notified G. H. A. that its legal status was in doubt.

Other local hospitals where courtesy privileges were requested for Dr. Selders, but in vain, included Providence, Columbia, Georgetown, George Washington, Sibley, Children's, Homeopathic, Episcopal and Emergency, according to the letters submitted yesterday by the Government.

Dr. Christie Ill

William E. Leahy, of defense counsel, revealed yesterday that Dr. A. C. Christie, one of the 16 Washington defendants, is seriously ill. A radiologist, he is reported to be suffering from a condition similar to that which took the life of his associate and codefendant, Dr. Thomas A. Groover, several months ago. Dr. Groover's death resulted from his pioneering work with X-rays and radium.

Grant W. Kelleher, special assistant to the Attorney General and who, with John Henry Lewin, is conducting the antitrust case against the doctors, expressed the belief that the Government will rest by next week-end. Leahy estimated that the defense will take about two weeks to present its case.

The trial opened in Justice James M. Proctor's court February 5.

Yesterday morning's session witnessed the prosecution's presentation to the jury of miscellaneous documents, some of which showed that the American Medical Association—one of the defendants—sought to enlist the sympathy of members of Congress in its feud with G. H. A.

Press Agent Lacked M. D.

A semi-humorous note was injected by the reading of a letter to the District Medical Society from Dr. William C. Woodward, then an A. M. A. official, but now retired and living here, in which he criticized the society's selection af a paid press agent to lead its fight on the Federal workers' cooperative.

Dr. Woodward, who is among the 20 individuals accused by the Government of restraining G. H. A., said in the letter that the campaign should be led by "someone who is a member of the medical society itself."

Justice Proctor, who was to have ruled yesterday on admissibility in evidence of the District Medical Society's expulsion proceedings against two G. H. A. doctors, postponed his decision until Monday morning, when the trial will be resumed.

29th Division Mobilization Goes Smoothly

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Correspondent.

Fort George G. Meade, Md., Feb. 21.—The Twenty-ninth Division tonight was concentrated here, 10,000 strong, after a week of movements by road and rail which brought its regiments together from the District, Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania.

Except for its unready camp, the division made the complicated movement without a hitch. Mobilization plans, made usually within 24 hours before troops left their home armories, were worked out to the last baggage car and each part of every plan fell smoothly into place.

Virtually all regiments which arrived in the last three days found their cantonment areas unfinished and workmen all over the place. They placed companies in temporary quarters, doubled up in barracks and mess halls, used buildings for headquarters never intended for that purpose, and generally made what shift they could.

The upshot of this last week of travail and movement is that the division's training program, scheduled to get under way Monday, will be started on time. Schools have been established for all specialists, each regiment is placing last-minute touches on its own training plant.

Six officers and 54 men, sent up ahead of their regiments to learn the Army's new system of classifying men for the work they are best fitted to perform, have established themselves as a classification detail for the division. They are now processing the men of the regiments at the rate of 200 daily, a task they will continue until every man has been interviewed and classified.

Musicians Wanted

The division will receive its first contingent of selectees March 3, it was learned today, instead of April 7, when the work of bringing it to war strength will begin. These first selectees will be musicians needed to fill up the bands of the regiments, none now above half strength.

A music school will be opened Monday under direction of Warrant Officer Meyer Goldman, leader of the 121st Engineer Band. He will be assisted by Warrant Officer Melvin MacCoul, leader of the 176th Infantry Band, and Warrant Officer Warren Schaffer, leader of the 104th Medical Regiment Band. All men familiar with musical instruments will be sent to the school, including selectees from the recruit reception center.

For those men who remain in camp Sunday despite leave over the Washington's Birthday weekend, religious services will be held in each regiment under auspices of the 12 chaplains assigned to the division. Protestant services will be by regimental chaplains, four of whom are Episcopalians, two Methodists, two Lutherans and one Presbyterian.

The 176th Infantry will hold its services with the assistance of an organ brought along from Richmond by the Blues. Chaplain Treadwell Davison, of the 111th Field Artillery, will conduct Episcopal services for the 111th and 110th Field Artillery, with a full band to furnish music.

Reckord, Chaplains Confer

Services by the division's three Roman Catholic chaplains will include mass by each at 8:30 a. m. Sunday. Confessions will be heard from 7 to 8 p. m. Saturday and from 8 to 8:30 a. m. Sunday.

Today, Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, commanding the division, held a conference with the chaplains, at which he stressed the importance to morale of the spiritual guidance the chaplains can give, as well as their assistance in furthering the recreational, educational and athletic programs of the regiments.

At the recruiting office in the Regular Army section of Fort Meade, it was announced that 445 of the 718 members of the Regular Army Reserve called into service from civil life for the present emergency, will be sent to stations in the Third Corps Area in the next three days. These reservists are former enlisted men who volunteered to serve four years in the reserve after their enlistments expired.

Today 29 left for Fort Eustis, 27 for Fort Belvoir, 3 for Fort Myer, and 11 for Arlington Cantonment. Monday, 72 will go to Camp Lee, near Petersburg, Va. The men will serve as instructors at replacement centers or will be assigned to combat units at Regular Army posts.

Mistrial Declared In Va. Slaying Case

King William Courthouse, Va., Feb. 21 (AP).—The trial of Norman H. Johnson, former Richmond attorney charged with the slaying of Willie Golden, 55, colored, ended last night in a hung jury. Judge J. Douglas Mitchell declared a mistrial and said the case would come before the court during the April term.

Irish in London Hit Neutrality, Support Britain

Copyright by New York Times

London, Feb. 21.—Hundreds of Irish men and women, meeting in London today, pledged themselves as opposed to Eire's neutrality and in support of the war aims of Britain and her Allies. Robert Sanders, former deputy lieutenant of County Cork, said:

"Many Irish people are in the service of the Crown in the front line of the battle."

A clergyman, amid cheers, advocated the reestablishment of "those wonderful Irish regiments."

A committee was formed, on which Lord Inchiquin, Lord Timlestown, Sir Hubert Gough, Sir Richard Butler and Canon Hannay are serving. It adopted a resolution proclaiming the group's loyalty to King George VI and the constitution of the British Empire.

Woman Is Found Killed by Gas

Florence Jordan, 32, was found dead in her gas-filled back room above a store at 610 Fifth Street Northwest yesterday by the shopowner, Morris Fisher.

Police said she was sitting in front of a stove from which gas was flowing. There were no notes and acquaintances were unable to give investigators any reason for the woman's action. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald certified the death to be a suicide.

10 Submachine Guns For England Stolen

New York, Feb. 21 (AP).—Theft of ten Thompson submachine guns, part of a shipment of 1,010 for England, was disclosed today by police who launched a search throughout the East.

The guns, complete but dismounted, were stolen from the Cunard White Star Line Pier. The theft was discovered last night.

ASCAP Names Mediation Board In Music War

New York, Feb. 21.—Gene Buck, president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, today named a committee which he said was ready to negotiate with broadcasters for settlement of the radio music war.

Besides Buck, E. C. Mills, John Paine, Walter Fischer, Oscar Hammerstein 2d, John J. O'Connor and Herman Starr were named.

Buck said that "up to this moment" ASCAP had had no indication from the National Association of Broadcasters "as to whether the NAB was willing to negotiate.

An N. A. B. spokesman, upon learning of the naming of the ASCAP committee, said that the broadcasters were waiting to receive a "bona fide offer from ASCAP" as to a contract and that "when, and if, such an offer is received, N. A. B. directors will probably appoint a negotiating committee."

Wounded Soldier's Condition Serious

Private John J. Lombardo, 26, who was injured by rifle bullet splinters during target practice Thursday at Fort Belvoir, remained in serious condition in the post hospital last night. However, officers said they thought his chances for recovery fair.

Lombardo, whose home is Pittsburgh, was hurt while working in the target range pits, officers reported.

Red Cross Helps Again

A shepherd dog last night completed a 1,500-mile trip to join his 14-year-old master.

According to the Associated Press, Donald Murray, ill in Denver, became lonesome for the pet he left behind in Harlan, Ky., four months ago. His mother couldn't afford transportation but asked railroad officials about an installment plan. The Red Cross came to the rescue.

George Enlists in Army

Newark, N. J., Feb. 21 (AP).—George Washington La Rue celebrated his eighteenth birthday anniversary today by enlisting in the U. S. Army. La Rue decided to start his Army training as an engineer.

And at Cedar Grove, N. J., the Washington family, George, Martha and George, jr., planned a quiet Washington's Birthday visit to Mount Vernon.

D. C. Restores More Parcels To Tax Roll

Properties Valued At $180,113; Jurisdiction Of Appeals Studied

Jurisdiction of appeals from decisions by the District Commissioners restoring millions of dollars worth of private property, heretofore tax exempt, to the municipal tax rolls occupied the District's legal talent yesterday as the city heads ordered an additional $180,113 in property returned to the tax rolls.

Walter L. Fowler, assistant corporation counsel, head of a special board of inquiry investigating all privately owned property, stated the property owners have 60 days after notification that their property is no longer tax exempt to seek a review from the Commissioners. Thereafter, the petitioner may seek relief in the courts.

Glenn L. Simmon, assistant corporation counsel in charge of tax matters, said the petitioner may lodge an appeal with the Board of Tax Appeals provided a complaint is first made to the Board of Equalization and Review.

$35,000 Involved

In all, the Commissioners yesterday restored five previously tax-free properties to the assessment rolls. Previously the Commissioners had ordered more than $2,000,000 of property taken off the free list on which more than $35,000 in real estate taxes is involved.

Properties affected are: George Washington University for unimproved land and two garages, located between Twenty-first and Twenty-second Streets and F and G Streets Northwest, valued at $99,471 and taxed at $1,741, which are said to be "not used for educational purposes;" the Washington Federation of Churches, 1749-1751 N Street Northwest, valued at $45,524, tax $797, because 10 rooms in building are rented; Lenthall Home for Widows, 1900 G Street Northwest, valued at $35,120, tax $605; Columbia Polytechnic Institute for Blind, 1808 H Street Northwest, for two bedrooms in the building which are rented; German Evangelical Concordia Church, Twentieth and G Streets Northwest, where a portion of building is said to be rented part of the time to the Washington College of Law. In the last two cases the tax assessor was asked to determine a portion of the value which may be taxed.

The matter of proper procedure in appealing from the Commissioners' orders was brought to the attention of Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech yesterday. He said he had not formed an official opinion as yet.

Direct Appeal Seen

The amendment to the Revenue Act of 1937 as approved July 26, 1939, states, in part:

"Any person aggrieved by any assessment, equalization or valuation made, may, within 90 days after October 1 of the year in which such assessment, equalization or valuation is made, appeal from such assessment . . . provided, however, that such person shall have first made his complaint to the Board of Equalization and Review respecting such assessment as herein provided."

Some observers interpret this section to mean that persons affected by the Commissioners' order may direct their appeal directly to Jo V. Morgan, one-man Board of Tax Appeals, without first going to the review board, which cannot offer any relief to the petitioner.

A case involving the tax exempt feature has already been decided by Morgan. In the case of Georgetown College vs. the District, the tax assessor sent a bill for $21 to the institution, as a real estate tax, for the portion of the Medical and Dental Building which is used for a book store. The assessor held that the book store, or rather the property involved was not being used for an educational purpose and hence was not entitled to exemption.

College Won Case

This case was decided by Morgan on February 9, 1940, in favor of the college. He said the book store was not operated for private gain since all of the profits derived from the operation is used for books for the medical library of the school. Sec. 713 of Title 20 of the District Code exempts from real estate taxation property used for educational purposes than is not used for private gain. In deciding the case Morgan referred to the court decision in District vs. Mount Vernon Seminary which stated: "If it had been intended to tax institutions earning a profit, i. e., having income in excess of expenditures Congress would have used the word profit or the word gain instead of private gain."

This particular case, which was not, at that time, contested by the District, may have an important bearing on all orders involving school properties which the special board of inquiry deems are not being used for educational purposes.

One example to date, is the restoration to tax rolls of property owned by George Washington University which at present is being used as a parking lot for students. School officials maintain they do not charge students for the use of the lot, which, in the future, will be used as a site for a new building.

Space on other college campuses used for similar purposes, it is expected, also will be ordered returned to the rolls.

Standards For Defense Housing Set

Requirements Listed For Apartments And Rooms to Be Rented to Workers

Apartments with windowless rooms or improperly ventilated kitchenettes will not be accepted or inspected by the housing subcommittee of the District Defense Council which next week inaugurates a Defense Housing Registry.

A set of standards has been compiled by the subcommittee, headed by Lawrence E. Williams, which must be met in order that a housing vacancy may be listed with the committee, which will have its headquarters at 458 Indiana Avenue Northwest.

Room inspectors, volunteers, will be enlisted by the committee and given special training under the supervision of Mrs. Helen Duey Hoffman, a member of the District Defense Council and executive officer of the Washington Housing Association.

Must Be "Pretty Good"

Purpose of the registry is to provide a clearing house for the hundreds of defense workers who are pouring into the city each week. The committee wishes to be certain that the Washington facilities offered to the workers are "pretty good."

Residents of the city are asked to come down to the registry, when it opens, and list their rooms, apartments and houses. But save the trouble of coming down if these do not have the minimum standards.

As for the houses and apartments the building must be structurally safe, comply with the District fire regulations, as to fire escapes, etc., all rooms used for living purposes must have windows, kitchenette properly ventilated; bath, toilet or kitchen must be shared with no more than one family and must be clean.

Lack of adequate heating facilities, indoor water supply or indoor toilet will not keep the house or apartment off the list, but such information will be listed on the office records and brought to the attention of the applicant.

Room Requirements

Inspection of apartments and housing will be carried out by the Alley Dwelling Authority. At the start there will be three inspectors.

Rooming houses must have responsible resident managers and comply with District regulations; bath and toilet facilities; 70 square feet of floor space for a room with one bed; 140 square feet for two beds; 200 square feet for three beds; 260 square feet for four beds and for additional beds 60 square feet per bed; double bed is equivalent to two single beds; room must have at least one window, opening for at least half its area, facing on a street, yard, or court (no airshaft) and the total window area must be not less than one-tenth of the floor area; heating facilities sufficient to maintain a temperature of 65 degree F.

Rooms will then be graded good, fair or bad as to cleanliness, and those rated bad will be out.

D. C. Income Tax to Skip Nonresident

Capital Workers Who Live Across Line Will Not Pay Double, Keech Says

By James D. Secrest

Government employes and others who reside in nearby Virginia or Maryland but earn their livelihood in Washington will not be subject to the District income tax even though the Commissioners' amendments, now pending before the House District Committee, are adopted by Congress, Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech stated yesterday.

Seeking to allay apprehensions of Congressmen that their constituents might be forced to pay triple income taxes, Keech said:

"No resident of Maryland or Virginia will have to pay the District tax for the simple reason that the income tax in both States is higher than the District tax."

Meanwhile, Representative Smith (Democrat), of Virginia, stated that he intends to attend the executive meeting of the fiscal affairs subcommittee of the House District Committee Tuesday morning. He said he had notified State and Arlington and Fairfax County tax officials of the conference.

Has Led Opposition

Smith, in past years, has led the fight in the House against any move to impose a District income tax on the salaries of his constituents.

Representative Sasscer (Democrat), of Maryland, said he would attend the subcommittee meeting also in the interest of his constituents.

"I don't know anything about the amendments proposed," he explained, "but I am against double taxation."

The principal fight expected in the subcommittee headed by Representative Hunter (Democrat), of Ohio, is between proponents of the sales tax and of the income tax.

Two Democratic members—McGehee, of Mississippi, and Herbert, of Louisiana—have stated their preference for the sales tax. The two Republican members—Dirksen, of Illinois, and Bates, of Massachusetts—are fathers and chief defenders of the District income tax.

Hunter Favors Sales Levy

Chairman Hunter said that he favors the income tax in principle but thinks the sales tax might be preferable for Washington because of the peculiar jurisdictional issues involved in the levying of an income tax.

The subcommittee will have two supporters of a larger Federal payment as provided in the Overton fiscal formula—Hunter and Herbert—but the plan is likely to run into opposition even before it reaches the House floor.

Board Acts To Speed Superroad

Move to Acquire Final Strip in Plan for D. C., Baltimore Link

The National Capital Park and Planning Commission yesterday moved to acquire the final strip of land needed to complete the right of way for a super highway from Washington to Baltimore.

The Maryland road commission and other Free State authorities, the commission decided, will be asked to supply land for a right of way from Fort Meade to Baltimore. The commission or other Federal agencies now own land that would carry the highway from Washington through Fort Meade via Bladensburg and Beltsville.

At the same time, Thomas S. Settle, commission secretary, revealed that the commission will meet at Annapolis Monday night with members of the Prince Georges County delegation to the Maryland State Legislature to consider Maryland's participation in the purchase of land along the Potomac River for the extension of the George Washington Memorial Parkway from the District to Fort Washington, Md.

In other moves affecting the future development of the National Capital, the commission:

Demolition Agreed

Announced agreement of affected parties on demolition of the old Pension Office Building on F Street between Fourth and Fifth Streets Northwest, now used as the General Accounting Office, to provide a site for a new District Court Building. The new building would cost between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000, according to preliminary estimates.

Urged the Navy Department to acquire land in the Northwest section for a parking lot for department employes. It is planned to expand the present Navy Building on Constitution Avenue Northwest by construction of a four-story wing at the rear of the building on land now used for parking.

It was understood that acquisition of parking-lot land would contemplate eventual construction of a new, monumental Navy Building on at least a part of the parking site.

The super-highway is a corollary of the commission's plans for development of a parkway in conjunction with a small-boat watercourse along the Eastern Branch of the Anacostia River.

Two years ago the commission was alloted by Congress $300,000 for extension of the Anacostia Park development from the Pennsylvania Railroad Bridge to Bladensburg. This year an additional $200,000 will make possible extension to the improvement to Beltsville.

Government ownership of land at Beltsville and Fort Meade, Settle pointed out, would provide right-of-way through the Army post where construction of new cantonment buildings has been planned to allow for the roadway.

The highway, Settle said, would provide for two lanes of traffic in either direction, each pair of lanes to be separated by a strip of parking. Park lands would be developed on either side of the highway, Settle said.

To develop the Eastern Branch as a small boat watercourse, it is proposed to dredge the stream to provide a 6-foot channel to Bladensburg. The commission together with members of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission will urge the Rivers and Harbors Board of the Army Engineers to undertake the dredging. The two commissions will attend a board hearing on the project March 3.

Flood Control Aid

Settle pointed out that a deeper channel would not only provide a waterway for pleasure boats, but should be considered as an aid to flood control in the frequently flooded Bladensburg area.

Legislation is being put in final form, Settle said, to provide for demolition of the old Pension Office Building as soon as the new $9,500,000 General Accounting Office is ready for occupancy. The building is to be erected on a site bounded by Fourth and Fifth and G and H Streets Northwest, just north of the Pension Building.

Settle said the District Bar Association, judges of the District Court, Henry P. Chandler, director of the administrative office of United States courts; the architect of the Capitol and the commission had reached agreement on the court site.

The court building will be at least twice as large as the present building, Settle said. It has been proposed that the present building, D Street and Indiana Avenue Northwest, be converted into an auditorium for large meetings.

In other actions, the commission approved plans for erection of a central heating plant on the Georgetown side of Rock Creek just above K Street Northwest and asked Army engineers to advise on suggested filling of Boundary Channel at the Virginia end of the Memorial Bridge. The bill would provide a roadway to the new Navy building now being constructed in the southwest corner of Arlington Cemetery.

'Can You Swing It, Girls?' Army Will Ask Its 'Dance Draftees'

Can you dance, how much do you weigh and what's your phone number?

These are just a few of the questions which will be asked the young women of the Federal Government who will be "drafted" for dance duty with the nearby recruits.

Interviews will be conducted, along informal lines, on March 8 at 1 p. m. in the board room of the District Building, according to Archie Edwards, whose recreation committee held a meeting last night in the District Building.

An elaborate program to entertain the Nation's selects is under way and includes dances, free movies, free tickets to Clark Griffith's stadium for baseball games, sports events and the like.

Yes, But Can You Dance?

Edwards said a trained staff of interviewers (reminiscent of the draft days) will question the girls as to weight, height, age, place of employment (must be Federal employes), phone number, and what's most important—"can the girl dance."

Nobody said anything about the ability of the soldiers as regards dancing.

However, the boys will be brought to the dance places in Army trucks. They will be returned the same way, and, right after the orchestra finishes "There's No Place Like Home" or "It's 3 O'clock in the Morning." The first dance will be about March 15 at Holbrook dairy in Brentwood.

Chaperons? Edwards said there will be plenty. In addition to the regular male and female chaperons, there will be the regular number of M. P.'s and camp officers. He said the dance hall and gymnasium of the Latter Day Saints, Sixteenth Street and Columbia Road Northwest also has been made available to the committee.

Getting There Up to Girls

The girls, it seems, will have to arrange their own transportation to the dance halls.

Winfree Johnson, head of the sports committee of the larger Welfare and Consumers Interest Committee of the District Defense Council, is making plans for boxing shows for the recruits, use of the municipal swimming pools this summer and use of the tennis courts and softball diamonds. He said the tennis courts and diamonds will be lighted, under present plans, to extend the time of use.

A variety show will be held February 27 at 8 p. m. at the Department of Agriculture auditorium for the enrollees and a special song, "March of Freedom," will be dedicated to the draftees. The music was written by Lloyd N. Garrison and words by Reau E. Folk, jr., both of the Agriculture Department.

Miss Sibyl Baker, of the Playground Department, has invited the men in uniform to the one-act play tournament, free of charge. These will be held at the Roosevelt High School auditorium February 27, March 1, 4, 6, and the finals on March 8. All performances begin at 8:15 p. m.

Films Portray 'Montezuma's Painted Land'

While Mexico City can show many buildings of the conventional white with red tile roof, still others are faced with colored tile from Seville, Spain. And where other coloring fails, there are always the variegated costumes and dappling flowers, the speaker said.

Bandit Holds Up Store Opposite FBI Offices

"A tall, thin sallow complexioned white man," who wore no overcoat, held up the Schulte cigar store at Ninth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, directly across from the Department of Justice Building, last night. He escaped with the contents of the cash drawer, estimated at between $50 and $100.

A clerk, Edmund Fee, 24, of 402 B Street Northeast, was alone in the store when the bandit entered.

"Let me have it," the bandit was quoted as saying after leveling a revolver across the counter. Given the money, the man disappeared in the street crowds. He was described as of middle age.

Two Youths Rob District Grocer

Two colored youths last night robbed a District grocer at gun point of $12.50, of which $2.50 was in pennies.

While one man guarded the door of the store at 601 First Street Southwest, the other trained his gun on the proprietor and rifled the cash register.

Brotherhood Week To Begin Today With Radio Talk

Dedicated this year to Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, cofounder of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, National Brotherhood Week will be begun today—Washington's Birthday.

The Chief Justice is the only survivor of the trio who established the interfaith organization in 1927. The others were Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War in the Wilson Cabinet, and Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, noted radio orator.

While the observance will formally begin today with an address at 5:15 p. m. over the Columbia network by Dr. Frank Kingdon, president of the University of Newark, many Jewish congregations called attention to the celebration in services last night throughout the city and country. The observance will keynote many religious services here tomorrow.

Albright Heads Revenue Camera Club

Clarence Albright was elected president of the Revenue Camera Club last night in Mount Pleasant Branch of the Public Library. He succeeds William E. Rabenhorst, who has headed the organization since its organization three years ago.

Also elected were R. D. Brown, vice president; Edward Strauss, second vice president; C. D. Gorman, treasurer, and Alice M. Reese, secretary.

Gang Celebrates as Rock Creek Tunnels Meet Within Half-Inch

SUCCESS PARTY—Harold B. Kemp (left), engineer, District Sewer Department, and J. Blake Gordon, director, Department of Sanitary Engineering, attended D. C. sewer project contractor's party

Fifty of the fellows that have been digging that tunnel through Rock Creek Park, last night celebrated the fact that both ends met within only a half-inch.

Working from two ends—Twenty-second and P Streets to the vicinity of Taft Bridge—employes of Joseph Lombardi Co. dug through 8,000 feet of Washington soil.

Last Tuesday the two ends met exactly, except for that half-inch, and since the gang felt justly proud they held a "holing-out" party at O'Donnell's Restaurant last night.

There was plenty of festivity about the completion of the tunnel, dug in three sections of 4,000, 2,000 and 2,000 feet and the big shots were there to help celebrate.

The latter included J. B. Gordon, director of sanitary engineering for the District; Harold Kemp, former chief engineer for the sewer department of the District; Elwood Johnson, superintendent of the sewage treatment plant of the District, and David Auld, who was the engineer in charge of the tunneling project.

Vaughn Bible Class Celebrates With Golden Jubilee Dinner

Stepping out last night in their golden jubilee dinner, 200 Vaughn Bible classmen of Calvary Baptist Church were told that practically-applied spiritual values can maintain the Nation's morale in the present defense emergency. Fifty-two years old, it is among the oldest and largest classes in the world.

"We do not need to worry about the morale of our Nation," Arthur S. Fleming said from a balloon-illuminated rostrum, "if we are willing to accept the teachings of Christ and make them a vital part of our lives." He is one of the Civil Service Commissioners and lay leader of Foundry Methodist Church.

Dr. O. R. Rice, only original member of the class, left a sick bed to attend the affair he has missed but a few times in many years. He sat near Georgia Aldrich, 89, an oldest member of the class in point of age.

Aldridge, one of whose hobbies is singing, left his seat to congratulate an impromptu "Sweet Adeline" quartet. They were George E. Harris, executive secretary of the D. C. Organized Bible Class Association; Harold S. King, Charles I. Haycraft and H. B. Irwin.

In an interview during the dinner, Aldridge recalled affiliating with the class when he came to Washington in 1891 to work at the Government Printing Office.

Bringing greetings at the banquet were Lynn C. Drake, class teacher and District Boy Scout executive; Dr. William S. Abernethy, host church pastor, and others. Charles Harvey Cooke was toastmaster in the absence of J. St. Clair Hambly, class president, who is ill.

Among other guests were Dr. Edward H. Pruden, president of the Washington Federation of Churches, who gave the benediction; the Rev. Mike Elliott, pastor of Luther Rice Memorial Baptist Church, and editor of the National Baptist magazine; Page McK. Etchison, president of the D. C. Organized Bible Class Association, and religious work secretary of the Y. M. C. A. and others.

P. U. C. Hints It Favors Crosstown Bus

Without making an official commitment the Public Utilities Commission yesterday indicated it favored a crosstown bus line, preferably along Park Road. No. decision is expected until after March 10.

Counsel for the advocates of the Military Road crossing of Rock Creek Park, of the Park Road route and the Capital Transit Co. have until that time to file briefs with the commission.

Only obstacle in the way of the Park Road-Klingle Road route is the 55-year-old Klingle Road bridge, which can carry safely only 12,000 pounds per vehicle. According to Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, who testified at the public hearings on the crosstown bus proposal.

It was indicated the District's bridge department would be consulted by the commission on recommendations for strengthening the span so that a bus would be permitted to traverse the proposed route. Capt. Whitehurst also expressed some fear about the width of the bridge. The bridge is about 19 feet wide. The width of a bus is about 8 feet.

Snow May Follow Relief From Cold In Washington

The Weather Bureau, branching out in its five-day forecast, said last night that snow flurries would probably hit the Appalachian region and possibly Washington in the next few days.

Yesterday the mercury hit a chilly low of 24 degrees and today, forecasters said, it will rise no higher than 40 degrees.

Gentle winds from the southwest will fan the Capital today and tomorrow will be partly cloudy, it was reported.

MENTHOLATUM Gently Soothes IRRITATED MEMBRANES

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 21.—The proprietor of Orlando's only all-night drugstore thinks Cleveland will win the American League pennant but confesses to a slight prejudice in the matter. "I could use that World Series check," he says.

POVICH

We don't mean to be giving you riddles. The Orlando druggist we're talking about is Gerald Walker, who has been a regular in somebody's American League outfield for the past ten years. A few weeks ago, Walker suddenly became the property of the Cleveland club in a three-cornered deal involving also Boston and Washington.

Gee-Gee is something of an important citizen in Orlando at this time. The screwball of American League baselines is now a respected member of the Junior Chamber of Commerce and does a daily stint on the town's new radio station as a sports commentator. The microphone has no horns for the fellow who wasn't afraid to steal second base with the bases full.

"As Ah reckon it, Cleveland kin win that pennant," Walker was saying in the heavy Mississippi drawl he has never lost despite being exposed to Northern civilization for the past ten years.

"We don't have anybody to beat but the Yankees, and Ah wouldn't say they're so tough.

"Looks like we got a purty good ball club at Cleveland. That's the team that should-a won the pennant last year and Ah figure we're gonna bat better. Keltner and Trosky are bound to have better seasons than they did last year and that will be a big help. All the Indians need is a little more hitting and Ah don't think anybody will catch 'em."

Walker moves to Cleveland from the Washington club in company with his old teammate, Joe Krakauskas and he had a kind word for Krakky. "That big galoot ought to be a good pitcher in this league. Ah was talking to Roger Peckinpaugh and Ah was telling him that Krakky could pitch. But Ah told Peck to run Krakky's legs off in spring training. Ah told him not to let Krakky throw a ball until April. What that guy needs is conditioning not pitching."

The only club with a chance to beat out the Indians is the Yankees, Walker was saying. "Ah don't figure Detroit and Boston at all. The Tigers are sunk if they lose Greenberg in the Army draft. Hank carries that Detroit club. He should claim exemption in the draft, because he's got 24 dependents and Ah mean those other 24 Tigers.

"Boston will have to work a miracle to win the pennant. Poor Joe Cronin don't have any pitchers. They got a pow'ful club outside their pitching, but their kind of pitching won't take 'em anywhere. This looks like a great spot for Cleveland to drop in there. The Yanks may not be so tough at that. Their pitching don't scare anybody and outside of DiMaggio they haven't got anybody who murders the ball. Ah think we got a better ball club, honest."

On that Cleveland club, Walker himself could be something of a sensation. He represents the only dash of color on an otherwise drab collection of Cleveland athletes. Owner Alva Bradley's complaint always has been that his Indians played very unexciting baseball. Walker, as long as he is in there, will put a stop to that. There is always excitement where Walker is, whether he provides it by stealing home for no reason or getting picked off base with the tying run.

Walker is one base-running screwball whose quaint antics never have been resented by the fans of any club he has been with. He was the "people's choice" at Detroit and Chicago and later at Washington. The bleacherites somehow were always ready to forgive Gee-Gee for base-running sins for which they'd want to lynch another guy. He has a way with the fans. And there are times when he capitalizes on his utter foolishness, times when he seems to have a charmed life on the bases with the opposition throwing the ball away for him.

Fun and frolic are native to Gee-Gee. As a football star in his college days at the University of Mississippi, he was actually awarded a letter by Tulane. How come? Well, it was just a Walker prank. He happened to be on the Tulane campus the day they were handing out the varsity football letters. Gee-Gee simply got in line among the Tulane athletes maintained a straight face and walked off with a block "T" from a school he had never attended.

Gee-Gee gets a great belt out of himself. Well aware is of his foibles. He tells on himself the story of the famous World Series game in 1934 when he was sent in to pinch-hit for the Tigers and was picked off first base by Dizzy Dean after making the hit that put the tying run on base. "Ah was a bum that day," said Walker, "did Ah ever tell you what was happening down in my home at Hattiesburg at the time?

"My two red-headed little boys, Pat and Mike, were washing my car in back of the house during that World Series game, and they had the radio turned on. They heard the announcer say "Ah was going in to pinch-hit for the Tigers, and they were mighty pleased when I made that single. Then a minute later they heard that Ah was picked off base. Said little Mike to little Pat, "That's our pop."

Roosevelt and Eastern Win in High Playoffs

Griffith Tries To Alter Style Of Masterson

MASTERSON

Nats' Owner Gives Special Lesson to His Young Hurler

By Shirley Povich.
Post Staff Writer

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 21.—Clark Griffith, whose chief stock in trade was pitching savvy when he led the American League hurlers 40 years ago, today took young Walter Masterson aside for a special lesson.

The 71-year-old owner of the Nats beckoned young Masterson from the group of rookies at Tinker Field, draped a paternal arm around the lad's shoulder and asked Masterson to listen.

"The first thing I want you to do is junk that slow curve you were throwing last year," said Griffith. "It's no good. You can't get it across the plate and when you do, it's so slow that the batter can take a hitch in his swing and murder it. I saw them do it last year."

Dutifully, Masterson nodded in understanding.

"That boy could be a good pitcher," Griffith told newsmen later. "He was off on the wrong track last season, fooling around with that slow curve. It wasn't natural for him. He's a big, strong fellow, and he's a fast ball pitcher. If he can pitch any kind of a curve, it's got to be a fast curve.

Cites Grove Case

"That was one of the great things about Lefty Grove. His curve was almost as fast as his fast ball. And a young fellow has more chance of getting a fast curve over the plate than a slow one. They don't know how to let up. When they try, they're out of the groove."

Griffith and Manager Bucky Harris have a special concern for Masterson inasmuch as he appears to be one of the two second-flight rookies who have a decent chance to help the Nats' pitching staff. They like his fast ball because it's slive and on occasion he has demonstrated good control.

At this writing, Masterson is rated along with Arnold Anderson as the only two rookie pitchers in camp who are destined to play any important part in the Nats' pitching. The Nats have carried Masterson for more than three years in an attempt to bring him out as a big leaguer.

Last season, Masterson was one of the club's chief disappointments after showing great promise in 1939. He won only three games and was charged with 13 defeats. He was wild, ineffective and discouraged. He was pitching with glasses in an attempt to better his control.

Aims for Stardom

This spring, however, the 20-year-old righthander has taken on new ambition. He doesn't want to be known any longer as the team's No. 1 jitterbug and boogie-woogie man. He wants to be a big league pitcher, and he's grim about it.

Manager Bucky Harris is not attempting to draw any accurate line on the talent of his rookie pitching crop until at least another ten days, when they will start throwing the ball with something on it. The only men in camp who are laboring hard are the rookie catchers—Jake Early, Al Evans and Dick Hahn.

Today, Coach Bennie Bengough had the trio of young catchers out on the diamond for 40 minutes after the pitchers piled into the showers. Bengough fungoed a few thousand skyscraping pop fouls and send the catchers after them. It was a pretty ragged exhibition they gave, narrowly missing skull fractures on several occasions, but Bengough, who used to be a catcher himself, forgave them.

Sensational Rally By Champ Saves His Crown; D.C. Boy Gains Early Margin

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Feb. 21.—Tony Zale, staging a sensational rally after being behind on points, successfully defended his National Boxing Association's world's middleweight championship tonight by knocking out Steve Mamakos, durable Greek from Washington, D. C., in the fourteenth round of their battle at the Stadium. Zale weighed 159 pounds to 157½ for his opponent.

Before the largest crowd to see a fight here in three years—14,306 fans who contributed a gross gate of $37,450—the Gary, Ind., fighter cut loose with a terrific two-handed attack late in the thirteenth round surging back after Mamakos had dominated the fight for two stanzas.

Right Smash Ends It

Tearing into the Washington battler Zale landed a straight right that rocked his opponent, followed up with a left to the body and shot a straight right hand punch to the face that sent Mamakos reeling to the canvas, where he rolled over on one side.

He was still down at the count of six, when the bell rang and he was almost on his feet as his handlers led him to his corner.

As the fourteenth round opened, Zale raced across the ring, sent the still glassy-eyed Mamakos spinning with a left and then, catching his opponent in Mamakos' corner, slashed a straight right that ended the scheduled 15 round battle. Mamakos hardy moved as referee Tommy Gilmore tolled off the count.

Zale in Trouble

Zale, who had trouble winning a split decision from Mamakos in the same ring last month, had plenty of trouble in the early rounds. In the fifth he came within seconds of losing his title as he took a terrific lacing later in the stanza. One of Mamakos' punches sent the champion down, but he was up without taking a count and was reeling under a barrage of lefts and rights to the head as the bell rang.

Mamakos, 22-year-old sergeant on leave from the 121st Engineers, District of Columbia National Guard, had an edge going into the thirteenth, largely through his aggressiveness and ability to take everything Zale had to offer. Then Zale turned loose the fistic dynamite that turned back the challenger, the count ending after 26 seconds of the fourteenth.

The Eyes Catch It

Throughout the battle, one of the most furiously waged here in some time, both fighters operated under the handicap of closed eyes. Zale opened cuts under both of Mamakos' eyes as early as the third round. Mamakos landed a right that started Zale's left eye closing in the fifth.

Webb Stops Tucker in 9th

By the Associated Press

New York, Feb. 21.—Jimmy Webb, a fighting young Irish clouter from out of the West, punched his way to a shot at the world's light-heavyweight championship tonight by stopping Tommy Tucker in nine rounds before a cozy gathering in Madison Square Garden. Webb weighed 169¼, Tucker 173½.

Held even for half a dozen rounds, the curly-haired walloper from St. Louis and Dallas opened up his big guns in the seventh, had the local larruper hanging on in the eighth, and then polished him off with a two-fisted assortment of bombs at 1:37 of the ninth round of the 15-round tussle.

Referee Frank Fullam halted the battle after Tucker had been floored once for a nine-count with a two-handed barrage and was wallowing around in his own corner, helpless, from some more of the same.

Melio Bettina, former light-heavyweight champion, made a triumphant return to the Garden by flattening Herbie Katz, rugged Brooklyn belter, in the ninth round of a 10-round semiwindup tussle.

Riders, White Tide Clash Tonight for Title; Ciango and Schulman Are Stars

By Bill Burnett

Once again it will be Roosevelt and Eastern in the final game of the public school cage title tourney, the 1940 champion and runner-up having survived first-round hostilities in the 1941 event before a packed gym at Tech last night.

With approximately 3,500 fans, the largest schoolboy "house" of the season, on hand the champion Rough Riders avenged an earlier beating by whipping Western, 40-31, and Eastern convincingly smashed the host Tech forces, 22-16. As anticipated, both losers were still very much in action until the last minute or so, but neither could overcome a hot streak of the winner earlier in the game.

Western, which ladled out Roosevelt's only interhigh setback this year, lost the opening encounter when it went scoreless in the second period while the Riders tallied 8 points. Tech was defeated in the third stanza when it saw a 10-9 half-time lead disappear and the White Tide ring up 8 points while it could manage for only 2.

Play for Crown

The winners will tangle for this year's crown tonight at Tech, following a preliminary between last night's losers at 7:30. The favorite, with their loss to Western wiped out, will doubtless be the doughty Riders, who beat Eastern in last year's windup game, 35-32.

Following the same outline as in every other engagement this year, Roosevelt's Hymie Perlo and Frank Ciango were the difference between victory and defeat for the Thirteenth Streeters in the opener. Perlo ran into tight guarding from Bob Leach and Don Cross and tallied only 10 points, fairly low for him, but shiftily, little Ciango stepped in nicely with 15. Western's Jimmy Karas, however, got more points than anyone else, 16, as he led a futile Raider effort.

With Roosevelt missing three foul shot attempts, Western had only a 7-6 deficit at the end of the first quarter. But with the start of the second stanza it lost all idea of the basket's location, going scoreless as Ciango and Charley Howard accounted for a 15-6 advantage at the intermission.

Raiders Got Away

Once the Raiders got 4 points away, at 30-16, but that was the best they could do as the last two quarters passed. The final half was chiefly marked by technical fouls called on Perlo and Jake Hilleary, and by the stellar all-around play of Ciango and Karas.

It was a technica foul, also, which gave Eastern its first scoring opportunity in the nightcap. Charley Ellis had something to say about a charity toss allowed Larry Capone and Moe Schulman made the shot good.

The Tide missed four single pointers as the first 8 minutes wore on, but still led by 4-3 at the end. Four points by Eddie Barton and three by Jack Walsh allowed the Trainers to take a 10-9 half-time lead.

"Nobby" Mater, a newcomer, was the only Tech player to hit the rim in the third quarter and Eastern took advantage of the fact to soar into a 17-12 edge. Moe Schulman, Mike Lieb and Neil Craig and Ritchie Poston split the scoring in the crucial quarter evenly. Though the count stood at 18-15 in the Tide's favor once in the last period, the losers couldn't get up steam enough to seriously threaten.

Eastern's Craig and Schulman and Tech's Barton got 6 points apiece to lead scoring. Schulman was the floor and defensive star of the winners, while the Maroon's Mater and Charley Ellis stood out despite their inexperience.

Terps Drop 21st as V.P.I. Wins, 48-39

After Bob Porter opened the scoring with a lay-up shot, the Liners moved to a 6-2 lead. Then Frank Montgomery got hot and sparked the Gobblers to ten straight points before Gordy's foul shot stopped their streak.

The Terps trailed all the way to the last minute of the half, when Gene Ochsenreiter sank a set shot and a miraculous hook shot to tie the score.

Julius Rubin, high scorer for V. P. I., started off the Tech second half with their first eight points, while the Terps were pecking away to bring the count to 35-38. Wharton was the key man in the Terp second session. The fighting little guard hit eight of his ten points in the second half. Ochsenreiter was high for Maryland with 15, ten in the first period.

Although they have yet to win, the Terps looked at their top form last night, but their fatal mistake still was that frantic nervousness in the last minutes which caused missed passes and defensive weaknesses.

Hudson Leaves To Join Nats In Training

By the Associated Press

Chattanooga, Tenn., Feb. 21.—Sidney Charles Hudson, the 1940 rookie pitching sensation of the Washington Senators, packed his bags today for the spring training jaunt confident he will evade the sophomore jinx which has struck down many another promising youngster.

"I will do better than I did last year," said the 23-year-old moundsman. "I have a lot more experience, my confidence is better and I know more about the hitters."

Hudson said he would aim for 20 victories—"which I should reach"—as a starter but would be satisfied with "nothing short of his best."

Hudson said that Manager Bucky Harris and Owner Clark Griffith had given him the mental assurance which should beat the sophomore jinx. "I am confident I can do the job now," he explained, "after making that comeback with six straight wins last season when I had had my ears pinned back consistently.

Fair Sex Protests Senator's Match With 'The Angel'

By the Associated Press

Boston, Feb. 24.—The fairer sex threatened tonight to interfere in the "grudge" wrestling match between Maurice "The Angel" Tillet and State Senator Joseph L. Murphy.

While Murphy himself prepared to go ahead with the match to prove wrestling a "fake" and "The Angel" a "cream puff," the solon's manager, Senator Chester L. Dolan, said he had received protests from some of the good-looking Murphy's admirers.

One letter, Dolan said, appealed to him to stop the match "in all fairness to the girls of Greater Boston."

"Perhaps you do not realize it, but life is fast becoming a problem to the young women of today," the letter read. "With the draft and the consequent scarcity of eligible men, we feel moved more than ever to spare the life and looks of one of the State's most eligible bachelors."

Eagles Top Skeeters, 3-2, to Take Lead

4,107 See Burns Tie League Mark; Scherer Adds to Strength of Locals

By Jack Munhall.

The Washington Eagles continued to play leap frog with the Baltimore Orioles for the Eastern Amateur Hockey League last night, defeating River Vale's Skeeters, 3-2, at Riverside to again supplant their neighboring rivals at the top by the margin of a single point.

With Norm Burns tying the league record of 53 goals for a single season by chalking up the first point of the match in the opening session, the Eagles added a pair of counters in the second stanza and managed to hang on to win a listless exhibition.

The third largest crowd since the birth of hockey here, 4,107 fans, watched Washington climb into first place for the third time in ten days, a position it probably will once again relinquish to the Orioles tomorrow when Baltimore plays host to River Vale.

The league goal scoring mark which Burns tied was established in the 1938-39 season by Herb Foster, then with Atlantic City, and duplicated last year by Norm Calladine, of Baltimore.

The Skeeters, who entered the game fresh from an upset victory over a league all-star team, scored once in the third period to lend a little excitement to a match saturated with whistles blowing and sloppy shooting and passing, but still Washington won without undue exertion.

Besides returning the Eagles to the league lead the match was heightened by the auspicious debut of Walter Scherer, the 202-pound defenseman Washington recruited from Nova Scotia to replace Johnny McTeer, who was released recently. Aggressive and with speed for his size, Scherer should be a big help to Washington in its stretch drive toward a first championship. On several occasions last night the 24-year-old newcomer displayed vicious body checks, something strangely lacking in the Eagles' defense, and though he didn't impress with his likelihood of scoring many goals, he is a welcome addition.

Gallaudet Five Wins, 37 to 33

Successfully stemming a belated fourth-period surge that threatened to upset them, the Gallaudet Blues shaded the Bridgewater College cagemen, 37 to 33, on the Kendall Green court last night.

After trailing, 5-0, Carmen Ludovico, Charley Duick and Don Padden all hit in quick succession, to give the Blues a lead midway in the first stanza, which they maintained for the remainder of the route, save for a tie count late in the final quarter.

Lanky Lee Garber, the Bridgewater captain, was high scorer for the game with 15 points, but the Gallaudet defense forced him to space his shots throughout the game so that he never had the winners in trouble.

Holding a 8-7 advantage as the first period ended, the Blues waged a steady offensive in the following quarter which proved to be the necessary margin. Ray Butler, Duick and Baldridge inaugurated this spurt and ran up a 22-11 lead at the half, while limiting the Bridgewater Club to two baskets in this period.

Gallaudet closes the current campaign here this afternoon, meeting Randolph Macon at 3:30.

Walter Haight Goes Local

Washington, D. C.

Dear Boss:

In answer to your note with reference to bulge in my hip pocket on recent date . . . it was a half pint. Of course, it was an empty bottle, Boss, but that just goes to show how unfair circumstantial evidence is at times. I don't blame you for believing I was off the wagon, despite the pledge I took after those two Miami blondes tried to make me buy a yacht. Sometimes I blame it on the newspaper stories the movie people have been showing. They put newspaper men in a bad light by always making the star reporter a drunk. Movie fans have gotten so they think we get only a column on a pint. It's bad for those graduate journalism students, too. They're getting so they think they have to smell like W. C. Fields, stagger all over the place and wear a sign, "I'm plastered" when they come in to apply for a job.

HAIGHT

Now, Boss, don't think I'm trying to talk you out of explaining that bottle thing. It was this way; I was wabbling up Fourteenth Street, bucking a 12-mile wind, when I met a movie man. You konw, Boss, these picture people drink like fish and I don't mean the ones in the itty bitty pool, either. He staggers up to me, slaps me on the back and says, "Well if it isn't Faiso Haight, himself. You still working at The Post?" I admitted I was employed at the paper, in a modest sort of way, and then he pipes up with, "You don't look happy, Haight. What you need is a drink."

With that he pulled out that half pint bottle to which you referred in recent note. He poked it toward me. Of course, I pushed it back with, "Sorry, fellow, but I'm on the wagon and you better not drink here, you'll get locked up." Well, Boss, he says, "You newspaper guys are getting to be sissies" and with that he gulped down the whole half pint. "And do you know what I'm going to do with this empty bottle?" he asked, as he wound up like Carl Hubbell, "I'm going to throw it right out there in the street."

Well, Boss, I have a certain amount of civic pride. As a native Washingtonian, I am an advocate of clean streets. Then again, I couldn't bear to think of some taxi driver having to pay for a cut tire. I don't want to pose as a hero, Boss, but I grabbed that empty bottle right out of his hand and shoved it in my hip pocket, where it probably would be this minute if I hadn't had a feeling that you had noticed it.

You know as well as I know that there have been and are newspapermen who drink. But there are doctors, lawyers and merchant chiefs who are far from fugitives from a demijohn and they are not portrayed as lushies at every opportunity.

I remember a fellow who filled in on our copy desk when he wasn't in his more familiar role of man about town. When his

Challedon and Mioland Clash; Dispose Choice in Flamingo

San Antonio Stake Draws 11 Horses

Muddy Track Looms As Foremost Racers Get Last Prep for $100,000 Handicap

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Feb. 21.—Shaping up as a bitter preview of the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap, 11 crack candidates were named to run in the $10,000 San Antonio Handicap at Santa Anita Park tomorrow. William L. Brann's Challedon and Charles S. Howard's Mioland dominate the cast.

Certain to be fought out over a rain-soaked track at a mile and one-sixteenth, the San Antonio, final major race before the Santa Anita Handicap March 1, drew the following entries.

Challedon and Mioland; Myron Selznick's Can't Wait, William Yancy Christmas' Rough Pass, Mrs. J. F. Waters' Vino Puro, Bing Crosby's Don Juan II, R. C. Stable's Royal Crusader, Mrs. Tony Pelleteri's Bay View and the Circle S Stable's Hysterical.

The event, figured to attract 25,000, and more if the rainy skies give way to sun, marks the first real race of the season for the Maryland champion, Challedon.

The 5-year-old son of Challenger is the question mark of the field. Thrown out of training stride, Challedon will be out to show his owner and Trainer L. C. Whitehill, as well as the public, whether he's the same horse he was last year and 1939. It will be his first competitive start since he won the Pimlico Special from Can't Wait last November 1.

Corbin Wins A. A. U. Ring Tourney Upset

The first upset of the show came in the opening bout when Cottony Corbin, unattached, outpointed Ray Brown, of the Police Boys' Club, No. 5, in a flyweight bout.

Making his first start as a featherweight, Raymond McAlwee, son of Ben McAlwee, bowling writer, outpointed Marvin Clark, of the National Training chool.

It was a slugging match with McAlwee coming from behind in the last round to gain the decision.

Well-conditioned novice boxers showed good form last night and will probably be heard from before the tournament is concluded next month.

The Apollo A. C. and the National Training School appear to have the edge in the running for the novice team title, both having entered more boxers than any of the other clubs.

One of the outstanding boxers to show last night was Owen Abell, a red-headed youngster from the Apollo Club, who outpointed Wilfred Banks, of the National Training School. Abell boxed well, has long arms and a shifty pair of legs. His exhibition was one of the classiest of the night.

SUMMARIES:

126-pound class—Donald Hubscher (Apollo A. C.) outpointed Dave Baker (Prince Georges County Police Club), three rounds. Bill Cross (Red Shield) won technical knockout over Ernest DeFrancesco (Merrick Club), second round. Ray Cleveland (Merrick Club) outpointed Olan Ford (Prince Georges County Police Boys Club), three rounds. Jack Ducheneau (Police Boys Club No. 5) won technical knockout over Jim Hubbard (unattached), 43 seconds, first round. Baker's Slap Saves Landon a Basket

One reason why Landon earned a 24-12 decision over St. Albans yesterday in one of the top prep school cage rivalries here this season was the under-the-basket work of Paul Baker, the Lelanders' center. He's shown slapping a rebound off the Saint goal to a mate as Crawford (8) and Fuller try to stop him. Brawner (11) and Kriner (7), of the winners, back up the play

Rice and Blozis May Set Marks In Garden Show

By Bill Boni

Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, Feb. 21.—The indoor track season climbs its midseason peak tomorrow night in the fifty-third national championships at Madison Square Garden.

Thirteen defending champions will be trying to repeat, and at least two of them are such standouts they'd have to be odds-on in any betting book. One is Greg Rice in the 3-mile run, an event for which he holds the indoor world record and in which he's quite capable of setting a new one. The other is Al Blozis, Georgetown's football tackle who upped the shot-put record to 55 feet 8¾ inches in this meet a year ago and already has come within 3 inches of that mark.

Rice, his last time out, hauled the 2-mile indoor record down to an almost unbelievable 8:53.4 and was at least a quarter of a lap better than the field in doing so. Don Lash comes back to challenge him again after six straight defeats, but even though Lash has had an extra week's rest and should be favored by the longer distance, there's no cause to believe Rice's winning streak will come to an untimely end.

May Set Another Mark

Blozis at his best is almost 5 feet stronger than any other shot-putter in indoor competition. In two meets this winter he has set as many records and, barring an unforeseen collapse, probably will be flirting with another tomorrow. The streamlined Georgetown giant may hit 57 feet most any night he sets his mind to it.

The mile, lacking this winter's sensation, Les MacMitchell, and last winter's champion, Chuck Fenske, is likely to be of secondary interest. The race figures to be a duel between Walter Mehl, of Madison, Wis., and Mel Trutt, of Des Moines, Iowa, whose close pursuit for all but the last quarter helped Rice to his 2-mile record last Saturday.

The presence of MacMitchell, Luigi Beccali, Andy Neidnig, of Manhattan, and Frank Leary, of Fordham, as anchor milers in the distance medley promises to make this the most exciting of the four relay race. There's a possibility of a world record here, to better the 7:27.5 returned three years ago by the Rideout and Brown twins of North Texas State Teachers.

Many Stars Entered

Earle Meadows in the pole vault, Mel Walker in the high jump, Boyce Gatewood, of Texas, in the hurdles and Mozel Ellerbe and Barney Ewell, two of a number of fine Negro stars, in the sprint are others capable of record-breaking performances.

Heats in four events during the afternoon will be sandwiched in between the national high school and prep school championships.

880—Bob Condon, Randall Cronin and Dave Harry.

Broad jump—Tilley.

Mile relay—Team to be chosen from among Condon, Cronin, Miller, Devlin, Chacos and Fields.

Catholic University entering a squad in a meet for the first time this season, will have a one-mile relay team composed of four from among John Weschler, Joe Street, Johnny Corbett, Charley O'Keefe and Jim Mahaney, two of those runners in the 880, Weschler and Charley Moutenot in the 60-yard dash, Moutenot in the pole vault, Leo Wall and Johnny Hutton

Landon Routs St. Albans by 24-12 Margin

The simple process of scoring a few more points than their foes in each quarter earned Landon School's basketers a 24-12 triumph over St. Alban's yesterday on the latter's floor. Second place in the Interstate Academic Conference fell to the Lelanders with the victory.

More than 1,000 fans witnessed this year's renewal of one of the city's biggest prep school rivalries.

Starting slowly, Landon rang up its fourteenth triumph in 17 games this season by improving a 5-4 lead at the end of the first quarter to 14-10 at the half and 17-12 after the third session. The Saints found it almost impossible to solve their opponents' zone defense and did most of their shooting from far out.

Paul Baker, center and one of the District's highest individual scorers, led point making for the game with eight points, two better than the aggregate of the Saints' Bill Terry.

Coolidge High Downs Wilson

Calvin Coolidge High's first-year cage team evened its record for the season at 7 won and 7 lost yesterday when it put on the pressure in the last period and a half to upset Woodrow Wilson, 26-18, on the Fifth and Sheridan court.

Behind by 8-7 and 17-12 at the end of the first two quarters, after the lead had changed hands seven times, Coolidge rushed into a 20-16 advantage going into the last eight minutes and won going away.

Richie Waterman, the winners' elongated pivot man, stole the scoring show from Wilson's Don Hillock by a single point, the first registering a 10-point total. Meikeljohn's 6 points and the 5 counters with which Bassin launched Coolidge's scoring, were also features.

Michigan Athletic Board Criticizes Drinking at Games

Ann Arbor, Mich., Feb. 21.—The University of Michigan board in control of athletics today criticized the "offensiveness" of football fans who bring their bottles to games and cited the Michigan-Northwestern game, during which drinking reached "a magnitude beyond even one's worst fears."

The board said it was impossible to "state a specific program" to eliminate the condition, and decided that "a relatively small number who lack sufficient self control to observe a course of conduct that will avoid giving offense must somehow be restrained."

Maryland Host In Basketball And Boxing

Maryland's indoor sports teams will bring their home seasons to a close tonight at College Park in a double bill that brings the Washington College basketball team and the Virginia Tech boxing squad against the Terps. The court game opens the hostilities at 8 o'clock.

Maryland wrestlers also have a match with the Duke grapplers at 3:30 in the afternoon.

As usual this winter, the Terps will be underdogs in the twin attraction but the ring team appears However, the Eastern Shore tossers, to have close to an even chance, who haven't beaten Maryland since 1929, will be set to take advantage of the Terps' off year.

Maryland and Virginia Tech will be battling for the leadership of the Southern Conference with the winner certain to enjoy the favored role in the title tourney that opens next Friday at Columbia, S. C. Neither has lost a conference match.

The Gobblers have a more experienced team and are especially strong in the first six weights. The best Maryland can hope for in the pre-match dope is a 4-all draw and that offers a big task.

Maryland will be bolstered by having John Cirdyack in the 165-pound class. He is a junior who has not fought since shining as a freshman. He couldn't make the weight last week but is okay now.

Joe McCarthy Picks Yankees For Pennant

By the Associated Press

Buffalo, N. Y., Feb. 21.—Manager Joe McCarthy of the New York Yankees Baseball Club asserted tonight before leaving for St. Petersburg, Fla., that his team has a "good chance to win the pennant, and Cleveland is the club to beat."

Last year "the breaks were against us all the way," but this season should be different, he said.

Chisox Off for Camp

Chicago, Feb. 21 (AP).—The Chicago White Sox, with all players under contract, got their 1941 training season officially under way tonight as 15 members of the team boarded a train bound for spring camp at Pasadena, Calif.

Regulars in the party included Catcher Mike Tresh and Infielders Bob Kennedy and Jim Webb. Coach Harold (Muddy) Ruel and Secretary Joe Barry were in charge of the contingent which will report to Manager Jimmy Dykes at Pasadena. Eleven pitchers were in the party.

The Chicago Cubs, the city's National League entry, are due to start for spring camp at Catalina Island, Calif., Sunday night, reported their list of unsigned players cut to nine today. Outfielder Bill Nicholson and Phil Cavaretta, first sacker, came to terms with General Manager James Gallagher.

May Wants More Money

Philadelphia, Feb. 21 (AP).—Merrill May, the Phils' star third baseman, asserted today he isn't a holdout, but that he simply wants about $1,500 more than President Gerald Nugent has offered.

In a telephone conversation from his home in Elizabeth, Ind., May said that all correspondence regarding the contract has been friendly, "but you know how it is."

"Nugent is trying to get me for his figure and I'm trying to get what I think I'm worth."

May expressed belief that "we'll be able to get together" before March 6, when the Phils report for training.

Ostermueller Signs

St. Louis, Feb. 21 (AP).—Pitcher Fritz Ostermueller and Rookie First Baseman Charles Stevens came to terms with the St. Louis Browns today—making it 20 players on the line for 1941.

The club purchased Ostermueller this winter from the Boston Red Sox, where he won 5 and lost 9 games last season. Stevens was with San Antonio of the Texas League.

Pirates Entrain for West

Pittsburgh, Feb. 21 (AP).—The rebuilt Pittsburgh Pirates began their annual spring odyssey today, with Manager Frankie Frisch already busy trying to turn out another "gashouse gang" like the one that earned him acclaim at St. Louis.

Armed with 1,000 baseballs for the toughest exhibition schedule in its history, the club entrained for the West to open training camp at San Bernardino, Calif., on Monday. The first of 37 exhibition games, including 28 with major league opponents, is set for March 7.

As usual, the "Fordham Flash" was a couple of jumps ahead. He'll be on the camp grounds tomorrow, having left early to look over Pitchers Russ Bauers and Johnny Gee, who have been receiving arm treatment on the West Coast.

Demaree Signs

Miami, Fla., Feb. 21 (INS).—Outfielder Frank Demaree signed a 1941 contract with the New York Giants today, leaving eight other players classified as official holdouts.

Manager Bill Terry, however, planned conferences tonight with Babe Young, Joe Moore and Buster Maynard with the hope of bringing them to terms.

Brewers Meet Sphas Twice

Two games with the world champion Philadelphia Sphas within less than 24 hours will confront the Washington Brewers tonight and tomorrow night.

Tonight the Brewers are to invade the ballroom of the Broadwood Hotel, Philadelphia, for an important American League game with the Sphas, while tomorrow night the two teams are to shift to Riverside Stadium for an 8:45 o'clock game.

George Slott and Petey Berenson, two players recently acquired by the Brewers through player deals, are to make their debut in Philadelphia tonight and at Riverside tomorrow night.

Berenson is scheduled to pair off with Nat Frankel at the guards; Ben Goldfadden will jump center, and Moe Dubilier and Ben Kramer will play the forwards tonight.

The Brewers are pointing for two consecutive victories over the Sphas in as many nights and in the event they are successful they not only will boost their own stock in the American League's second half race, but also will all but eliminate the Sphas from consideration.

On the Line

CONSIDINE

New York, Feb. 21 (INS).—Sportin' around:

The Jockey Club's offices are flooded these days with applications for war-like names for the new crop of yearlings. The front pages of the country's newspapers are always mirrored in the naming of thoroughbreds. There were 60-odd applications for the name Lindbergh the day he completed his solo flight . . . Hash is still the most wonderfully named horse of the era—for he is by Questionnaire out of Delicacy . . . The official announcement at Philadelphia that Joe Louis kayoed Dorazio in 1:30, instead of 0:30, wasn't the only mixup in the time-keeping department that night. That 305-pound fighter, Ben Moros, was counted out ludicrously fast by a knockdown timekeeper who hammered out the seconds as if his life depended on driving that imaginary nail into the ring apron in five seconds flat.

Don't know how the sports pages would survive this drab season without the Dodgers . . . An awful lot of old time racing men will tell you that the greatest American thoroughbred, bar none, was Exterminator . . . It couldn't be those wahinis who are keeping Hank Greenberg in Hawaii. They aren't what they're cracked up to be . . . From what the boys say, Henry Armstrong won't be too much of a novice as a swing-band leader. He spent a pretty good portion of his time in night clubs, toward the end . . . Funny what a title can do for a fighter. There is an old fallacy in the ring game that a fighter is never as good as the night he wins the crown. It's not true. The title gives a man class, confidence, new power, new command of his craft. Look at Zivic . . . Who was just another guy for a long time, but who now is one of the prime postgraduates of the sock science . . .

Trainer Henry McDaniel says that Bimelech will do a lot this year to make old man Bradley forget that he won't have a horse in the Derby . . . thinks he's a cinch to win the Widener . . . we overlooked the Louis-Pastor fight, in Detroit, in giving a list of the attendance at Louis' title fights. Doc Morris, who is out there steeling the city for Mike Jacobs' coming shows there, reminds us that 35,000 saw that fight. Also that Detroit still holds the record for sports crowds—700,000 at the Harmstorth Trophy races.

Al Schacht's book, "Clowning Through Baseball," just out, is well worth its modest $1 price tag . . . As great as Bob Feller has been, he still has a tremendous task ahead of him, if he is going to be "another Walter Johnson" in fact as well as fable. He has won 82 games and lost 41 in his five season of pitching. Johnson pitched for 22 years and won 413. Walter's record for his first five years was 80 wins and 80 losses. In his second five years of competition, Johnson won 32, 36, 28, 27 and 24. In some ways, however, Feller's first five years have been more impressive than Johnson's were. He has struck out 973 batters, whereas Johnson struck out 910, in 250 more innings of work. He has also allowed fewer hits than did Johnson—865 to 1,099. But he's got a long way to go.

That was sad about Freddy Fitzsimmons' father passing away. The old man virtually kicked his portly son into baseball. Back in the spring of 1922, in old Mishawaka, Ind., Freddy decided to give up baseball. He had had a good season with Muskegon, but rebeled when he didn't get a part of the money Indianapolis paid Muskegon for him. So he got a job with the Mishawaka Fire Department and was settling down to that life when the old man burst into the firehouse one day, consarned him into packing his suitcase, and ran him back into baseball . . . The old man suffered a lot toward the end, but some of his pain must have been alleviated by the fact that his Freddy, at a ripe old baseball age, was setting a new National League pitching percentage record with 16 wins against two defeats.

Night time trotting, at Westbury, Long Island, should go over this year, what with two weeks of Grand Circuit racing, new lighting and $80,0000 worth of improvements about the place . . . that was more than decent of Santa Anita to give $5,000 to the family of Jockey Earl Dew, who was killed at Agua Caliente, which, to date, has not contributed a farthing . . . The most revolting thing we've seen in a long time was the newsreel of that women's rassling match in Washington. Will this be a part of Madison Square Garden's re-education of New York to rassling?

C. U. and Columbus Renew Ring Rivalry

The red-hot intra-city boxing rivalry begun last year between Catholic University and Columbus University flares anew tonight at Brookland where an expected overflow crowd will watch the Cards attempt to duplicate last year's victory over the Explorers. First bout will be 8:15.

C. U., with a record of three victories in four starts, will rule the favorite, but Columbus which has won once and tied once, probably will make it close all the way.

The Cardinals will be rebounding from their last week's defeat at the hands of Southwest Louisiana Institute, C. U.'s first defeat in 13 matches, while Columbus goes in off a 4-4 tie with Arkansas Tech. C. U. has beaten Lock Haven State Teachers, U. S. Coast Guard Academy and Maryland. Columbus' lone victory was over The Citadel.

Fiercest action is expected in the heavier classes where both teams are the strongest.

One of the features of the match will be the lightheavyweight tilt between Leo Houck, jr., of Catholic, and Reds Doherty, the Explorers' knockout artist. Houck has won two bouts, one by knockout, and lost one, to Maryland. Doherty is undefeated and flattened Dick Misenheimer, of Arkansas Tech, in exactly 25 seconds.

Catholic U.	Weight.	Columbus.
Mandris	120	Romer
Bartone	127	Taub
Obregon	135	Jackson
Hughes	145	Jacobsen
Gerski	155	Coe
Strang	168	Cox
Houck	175	Doherty
Ksycewski	Unlimited	McAleer

Wilson Bows To Shepherd

Special Dispatch to The Post

Shepherdstown, W. Va., Feb. 21.—A last-minute field goal and foul shot by Red Lally gave Shepherd College a 33-31 victory over Wilson Teachers of Washington here tonight.

Wilson went in front in the first quarter, 9-8, and increased the lead at half-time to 19-15.

Shepherd found the range in the third stanza and soon set the pace, outscoring Wilson, 12-4, to lead at conclusion of the third quarter, 27-23.

Wilson edged up on the ultimate victors and went ahead in the last two minutes of play 31-30, but Lally took the spotlight by caging the winning markers.

Hialeah Test Draws Star 3-Year-Olds

Bimelech in Year's Debut Against Hash, Shot Put; 25,000 Crowd Is Expected

Miami, Fla., Feb. 21 (AP).—The best double feature race program of the season—the $20,000 added Flamingo Stakes and Bimelech's 1941 debut—will pack 'em in at Hialeah Park tomorrow.

Officials hope for a crowd pushing the 25,000 mark by the time E. R. Bradley's 1940 top money winner goes to the post to show what he can do as a 4-year-old.

Whirlaway, Warren Wright's 1940 2-year-old champion, was beaten in a tryout but has the class to win even under top weight of 126 pounds.

Dispose Impresses

King Ranch's ispose made a lasting impression at Hialeah in winning the Bahamas handicap and may become the pari-mutuel favorite.

Bobbing up as a new threat is Curious Coin, which surprised even some Coldstream Stable handlers in a workout by going a half mile in 45 1-5 seconds—better than the accepted American record.

At higher odds are the two horses which finished one-two ahead of Whirlaway a week ago—Agricole and Cadmium both owned by Theodore Mueller's Shady Brook Farm.

Bimelech will race against three other good horses—Shot Put, Mrs. Marie Evans' 1940 distance champion; Greentree Stable's Hash, conqueror of the great Challedon in the Naragansett special, and P. B. Codd's Gino Rex.

Likely Widener Starters

All are likely starters in the $50,000 Widener Handicap next Saturday.

Both features tomorrow will be run over the mile and a furlong distance.

Besides Whirlaway, Dispose, Curious Coin, Agricole and Cadmium, other entries for the Flamingo are the Greentree Stable's The Rhymer, Woolford, Farm's Signator, J. R. Macomber's Red Vulcan, Circle M. Ranch's Battle Colors, Mrs. W. M. Jefford's Sailor King, Belair Stud's Bolivar, W. Guest's Yankee Party, Maxwell Howard's Starry Hope and Christiana Stable's Ice Water.

McCreary Pilots Longshot Winner in Hialeah Park Feature

Sensational Rider Astride Don Moss

Longest Price Horse In Field Wins, Pays $25.10; Wise Bee Is Second in Purse

By the Associated Press

Hialeah Park Fla., Feb. 21.—An otherwise drab afternoon of sport was enlivened by the continued sensational riding of little Conn McCreary here today. The St. Louis boy once again showed that the recent loss of his 5 pounds apprentice allowance does not mean he can't go right on riding winners.

Piloting the longest-priced horse in the field of five, McCreary brought Don Moss, representing the Brown Hotel Stable, from far out of it to win the featured Wildwood Purse, for veterans in grade C, at 6 furlongs. Ten lengths off the pace leaving the backstretch, Don Moss responded with a thrilling rally and beat W. H. Gallagher's Wise Bee, the favorite, by a length. Lemar Stock Farm's Mar Le, a close second choice, was third, a length and a half farther away.

Don Moss, which had started only once this winter, when he wound up out of the picture at Tropical Park, paid $25.19 for two and stepped home in 1:11 2-5. The victory gave McCreary his second triumph of the day and he was loudly cheered even by many who bet against his lightly regarded mount.

McCreary had 30 victories as an apprentice and today rode his sixth since losing his "bug." The veteran Don Meade has ridden 35 first-place horses.

McCreary's first winner today was Etruscan, paying $8.60 for $2 in the third race. Pavilion placed and Parfait Amour was third.

PONY BALLET, quickest to begin, displayed speed and raced straight, but could not withstand the winner's bid. VIOLANTE broke well and was prominent throughout and held the others safe. BOB DODGE raced evenly.

PAJAS, under slight restraint and saving ground to the stretch turn, where she swung around the leaders and, responding to strong pressure, wore SUBURA down. The latter gained steadily, saved much ground entering the stretch and made a bold effort, but failed to last. GENERAL PLANET, away slowly, moved up menacingly at the furlong pole, was blocked, but came between the leaders and closed strongest of all. CLASSIC BEAUTY faltered when it came to a drive.

Daily Double, RATIONS and PAJAS, Paid $120.10

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ETRUSCAN, $8.60, $5.00, $3.80; PAVILION, $5.90, $3.50; PARFAIT AMOUR, $4.10.

ETRUSCAN forced a steady pace and raced OKABBIT into defeat in the first 5 furlongs, drew out through the stretch, but had nothing left at the end. PAVILION, well up and under light restraint early, finished stoutly and held PARFAIT AMOUR safe. The latter broke slowly and gradually bettered her position and turned in a good effort. OKABBIT broke fast, displayed the most speed, but then quit in the final drive. EMBRACE stumbled and unseated her rider at the start.

ALPOLLY, rated off the pace until well straightened into the stretch, closed with determination between the leaders and outlasted his opponents in the final drive. IN SANG, on the outside in the first 5 furlongs, went to the rail turning into the stretch and responded gamely to punishment, but could not get up. BRAVE ACTION, away tardily, made up much ground and finished with a belated rush on the outside. ADE HALA, in repeated difficulty.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CHOPPY SEA, $3.30, $2.60, $2.40; ROYAL RUBY II, $3.70, $3.20; BATTLE STAR, $3.40.

CHOPPY SEA, carried out going to the first turn, moved into contention entering the backstretch, followed the leader closely until straightened into the stretch and continued gamely when challenged to hold ROYAL RUBY II safe in the final drive. ROYAL RUBY II, away to the good at the first turn, trailed until midway around the last turn and moved up fast on the outside when placed to pressure, but hung when the real test came. BATTLE STAR saved worlds of ground rounding the first turn, set the pace on sufferance and faltered in the final furlong. INGOMAR was almost taken to the outside fence when SHIM SHAM ran out and was not persevered with.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,400. For 4-year-olds and upward. The Wildwood. Grade C. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:38. Off 4:39½. DON MOSS, a trailer the opening half mile, swung wide coming into the stretch, gained steadily and wearing WISE BEE down, won going away. WISE BEE forced a swift pace, raced TIME O' WAR into defeat and drew out entering the stretch, but faltered suddenly in the final 70 yards. MAR LE, well placed the early stages, failed to respond when called upon, but easily disposed of TIME O' WAR. The latter quit in the last quarter mile.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,200; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 5:09. Off 5:11. Winner, D. C. EARLY SETTLER, running kindly, took command going to the first turn and held sway thereafter, winning fully urged. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MIGHTILY, $21.30, $11.60, $7.50; SIR REYNARD, $23.20, $10.60; WOODEN INDIAN, $4.80.

MIGHTILY broke alertly, saved ground all the way and responding determinedly when the final issue came, outstayed SIR REYNARD. The latter, a keen contender throughout, was unable to get up. WOODEN INDIAN, slow to get going, finished with a belated rush. CONRAD MANN made up a lot of ground in the final half mile. STOCKBOARD broke down.

Selections at Hialeah

Dear Al:

Here are brief histories of the leading candidates for today's $20,000 Flamingo Stakes:

WHIRLAWAY — 3-year-old chestnut colt, by Blenheim II—Dustwhirl by Sweep. Owned by Warren Wright's Calumet Farm. Trained by Ben Jones. Bred by Calumet Farm. Named an outstanding 2-year-old of 1940. Leading money-winning juvenile of that year, earning $77,275 as result of 7 firsts, 2 seconds and 4 thirds in 16 starts. Won the Saratoga Special, Saratoga Hopeful, Breeders' Futurity at Keeneland and the Walden Stakes at Pimlico. Won 1941 debut at Hialeah on February 8. Finished third to the Shady Brook Farm pair, Agricole and Cadimium, in the Arcadia Purse on Tuesday, February 18.

DISPOSE—3-year-old bay colt, by Discovery—Swiftplay, by Swift and Sure. Owned by Robert Kleberg's King Ranch. Bred by Mereworth Stud (sold as yearling at auction for $7,100). Trained by Max Hirsch. Won two out of five starts as a juvenile in 1940 and earned $1,400. In first 3-year-old start at Hialeah February 1 scored smashing victory in the Bahamas Handicap. Set track mark of 1:22 2-5 for 7 furlongs to earn $1,290.

CURIOUS COIN—3-year-old chestnut colt, by Brandon Mint-Curiosity Box, by Mackenie II. Owned by Coldsteam Stable (Jack Howard and Elmer Dale Shaffer). Bred by R. W. Daniel. Trained by Jack Howard. Won four out of 16 starts as a juvenile in 1940 to earn $5,325. Won $3,000 at Hialeah as result of two victories and a second to Dispose in the Bahamas Handicap.

THE RHYMER—3-year-old chestnut colt, by St. Germans-Rhythmic, by Royal Minstrel. Owned by Mrs. Payne Whitney's Greentree Stable. Bred by Greentree Stable. Trained by John Gaver. Did not race as a two-year-old in 1940. Started three times at Hialeah, winning twice and finishing second once, to earn $2,000.

SIGNATOR—3-year-old chestnut colt, by Insco-Green Leaf, by Supremus. Owned by Herbert M. Woolf's Woolford Farm. Bred by Herbert M. Woolf. Trained by Ross O. Higdon. Started 10 times in 1940, earning $2,875, as result of 2 firsts, 3 seconds and 2 thirds. Second to Whirlaway in first 1941 start, and won a seven-furlong sprint to earn $1,200.

ACRICOLE—3-year-old colt by Agrarian-Fontanelle, by Whiskalong. Owned by Theodore E. Mueller's Shady Brook Farm. Bred by David Knox. Trained by George Brooks. Won three of 11 starts in 1940 and earned $1,250. Started four times at Hialeah this meeting, winning two and placing once, earning $2,250. Beat Whirlaway in Arcadia Purse, February 18.

BILL.

First Race—REMEMBERING appears to have an edge on the juveniles gathered for the hop, skip and jump scheduled to open the program. The small field should allow him to overcome that inside post position. FLUSH comes from a good barn and is deserving. ZO ZO for the minor award.

Second Race—KANSAS CITY seems pounds the best in this sprint affair. Gets in with an average weight assignment and I see no reason for mistakes. TRAGIC ENDING breaks off the rail and has the speed to make the most of the position. SILVER TOWER may take the show money.

Third Race—CORYDON, with Arcaro to do the booting, probably is the right one in this mile and a half affair. He is coming into best form and I'm going to string along. CHERRY TRIFLE likes the route and is a threat. TRIMLY must be respected because McCreary is likely to ride.

Fourth Race—CUCKOO promises to be prominent in a field of this kind. Has a bit of class that may take him to the wire ahead of these. The entry of PEANUT LADY and WEARY FLOWER is formidable and will be in the thick of the battle. DRUCO SYSKA for the show end.

Fifth race—Bimelech is a natural choice in this field. The former champion has been working well and apparently needs only some energetic handling, which we hope will be supplied by Don Meade. Hash also has shown good form in training. Shot Put may force Gino Rex out of the pay circle.

Sixth race—Dispose came down from Columbia, S. C., and ran away with a handicap. He is back again and reported fit. Needs only to race back to that last. Curious Coin has worked well and is dangerous. Whirlaway failed miserably with sprinters and is not a solid wager.

Seventh race—West Sea came out after a long rest and turned back fair company. McCreary may have the mount today and I look for another bang-up effort. Brown Queen II is speedy and deserves attention. Big Brand's Son may set the pace and is a threat.

$48,000-a-Year Exchange Head Gets Army Test

New York, Feb. 21 (AP).—William McC. Martin, jr., who as president of the New York Stock Exchange is one of the highest paid 34-year-olds in the country, was one step nearer the rank of buck private today.

He received his Selective Service physical examination yesterday but said the draft board had not yet notified him of his classification.

Although Martin wears glasses, he is one of the top rank amateur tennis players of the Nation, so he thinks the doctors found him in good condition.

A bachelor, Martin has not asked for deferment, and says that if he is called to duty before June 1 he will resign his $48,000-a-year post with the exchange. On June 1, his present contract term expires.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Feb. 21 (AP).—The wheat market consolidated the week's 3-cent advance with little difficulty today, although prices fluctuated nervously over a range of about a cent.

An early upturn of about ⅜ cent established new highs for the recovery move, but the market slumped rather sharply later only to recover and close unchanged to ⅜ lower compared with yesterday. May, 80@81; July, 75¾@75⅞.

Profit-taking, evening up sales for the holidays and independent weakness of corn, rye, soybeans and lard unsettled wheat trade. Offsetting this, however, was support that came from mills or was inspired by additional crop complaints from the Southwest. The threatening international situation, with reports of troop movements in the Balkans, maneuvers in the Pacific and the presence of German "aid" units in Spain, caused dealers to keep their accounts adjusted, if possible, for any eventuality over the weekend.

Corn closed ⅜@½ lower than yesterday; May, 60¾; July, 60¼. Oats unchanged to ⅜ off. Soybeans, 1¼@2 cents lower. Rye, ½@¾ down, and lard 18@23 lower.

U.S. Body Says Broader Wool Market Needed

By the Associated Press

The Commodity Exchange Administration said yesterday that a study of futures trading in wool tops indicated there was need for a "broader" wool market which would trade also in raw wool futures.

The only United States wool futures market is that in New York which deals only in wool tops—wool which has been scoured, carded and combed in preparation for spinning.

Reporting on 22 months of study of trading on the New York market, the CEA said it had found that a "very large proportion" of the transactions was done by a small group. Ten firms, it said, accounted for more than half of the total trading and frequently held a substantial proportion of open contracts.

CEA officials said the New York Wool Tops Exchange, known officially as the Wool Associates of the New York Cotton Exchange, was considering broadening its operations to include wool as well as wool tops.

Plans for the selling operation include, the establishment in New York of a company collaborating with a sister company in Brazil for the financing of infant Brazilian industries and the importation of their output here for sale to United States distributors.

Boston Wool

Boston, Feb. 21 (AP). (U. S. Dept. Agr.)—A good demand for wool existed in the Boston market today. Fair quantities of fine wool from South America were being sold at firm prices. Australian merinos were in good demand at steady prices. Interest in domestic wools was chiefly in the new clipped wools being offered for delivery in July. Offerings of spot domestic wools were very limited, but a few sales of fine territory wools were closed at firm to slightly higher prices.

Capital Store Sales Steady During Week

Washington department store sales in the four weeks ended February 15 were 18 per cent heavier than in the like period last year, but were unchanged in the week ended last Saturday.

Commenting on the D. C. failure to show a gain, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond said: "The comparison of the 1941 with the 1940 week would have been much better except for a very large decrease reported by one Washington store."

The rest of the Fifth Reserve district showed notable gains in the latest week. Baltimore department store sales were 24 per cent heavier, while the district as a whole showed a 9 per cent increase for the latest week and 20 per cent for the four weeks ended February 15.

Nationally, the Federal Reserve Board estimated that department store sales in the week ended February 15 were 19 per cent larger than in the corresponding week last year.

The margin was the same as in the preceding week, and the average gain for the four weeks ended February 15 over the similar period last year was 15 per cent.

By Federal Reserve districts, increases last week over a year ago included:

Boston, 57; New York, 22; Philadelphia, 39; Cleveland, 20; Richmond, 9; Atlanta, 20; Chicago, 15; St. Louis, 25; Kansas City, 12; Dallas, 21; and San Francisco, 5 per cent.

Week's Auto Output Rises to 129,240

Detroit, Feb. 21 (AP).—Ward's Reports, Inc., estimated today that factory output of new automobiles and trucks this week would total 129,240 units. This compares with 127,510 last week and 102,670 this week a year ago.

The survey said that volume manufacture of shells now is proceeding in three plants of the motor car industry, in addition to a great volume of production of other ammunition components.

Sugar Deliveries Heavier in Year

By the Associated Press

The Agriculture Department reported yesterday that sugar delivered to American markets under the quota system totaled 6,890,792 short tons, raw value, in 1940.

This quantity compared with 6,867,533 tons delivered in 1939 and 6,643,253 in 1938.

The department said stocks of sugar in the hands of refiners, beet sugar factories and importers of refined sugar totaled 2,268,240 short tons on December 31 compared with 2,299,350 on the comparable date in 1939. Beet sugar stocks totaled 1,601,756 short tons.

Abbott Declares Extra Dividend

Chicago Feb. 21 (AP).—Abbott Laboratories has declared an extra dividend of 10 cents a share on common stock in addition to the regular quarterly dividend of 40 cents a share, both payable March 31 to stock of record March 12. A similar extra dividend was paid a year ago.

Regular quarterly dividend of $1.12½ a share on 4½ per cent cumulative preferred stock, payable April 15 to stock of record April 1, was also declared.

London Stocks

London, Feb. 21 (AP).—Rising domestic rails took over leadership of an narrow securities market today. The carriers weakened Thursday after sharp gains earlier this week as a result of favorable dividend announcements. British government bonds were well supported and closed around the previous finish. Indian loans also attracted modest favor. Oils tended lower but Kaffirs kept a steady footing. In the industrial group, tobaccos and breweries gave up a few pence but others in this division ended with negligible variations.

New York Dry Goods

New York, Feb. 21 (AP).—Activity in print and broadcloths was small, with interest centering chiefly in coarse yarn goods as firm prices. There was good inquiry for women's wear woolen fabrics in the piece goods section, although deliveries were hard to obtain. Prices tended upward for rayon piece goods, with triple sheers and sharkskins in excellent demand. Silks were quiet.

Pre-Holiday Deals at Sluggish Pace As Stock Market Drifts Aimlessly

New York, Feb. 21.—The rallying push of the stock market bogged down today but little weakness developed and, while minor declines were widely distributed at the close, modest advances also were plentiful.

The list started with a hesitant trend and mild irregularity was the rule during the remainder of the proceedings.

Lightness of dealings made price changes meaningless in most cases. Transfers of 298,590 shares were among the smallest for a full session in nearly six months and compared with 451,630 yesterday when the averages experienced the best day's upturn since November 7. The Associated Press composite of 60 issues was unchanged at 40.7 but on the week was up .6 of a point net.

Business news remained a bolstering influence but the tendency apparently was to keep commitments light pending tomorrow's holiday when the principal financial markets of the country will recess. In addition, some potential buyers stood aside because of growing war tension in the Orient and fears a new Nazi blast at the British was imminent.

Stocks finishing on the upside included Youngstown Sheet, U. S. Rubber, Sears Roebuck, Douglas Aircraft, Glenn Martin, American Telephone, Westinghouse, General Electric, DuPont, Union Carbide, Philip Morris, Owens-Illinois, Union Pacific, Kennecott and Coca Cola.

In arrears were U. S. Steel, North American, Public Service of New Jersey, Anaconda, American Smelting, Johns-Manville, Chrysler, Santa Fe, Great Northern and Southern Railway.

Among items considered by market followers were: This week's automobile production was up substantially; steel mill operations at Youngstown next week were expected to reach a 12-year top in percentage output and a record high in ingot production; retail and department store sales continued to expand, and bank loans to commerce, industry and agriculture showed further wide increases.

Bonds and commodities were a trifle mixed. Wheat at Chicago was unchanged to off ⅜ of a cent a bushel and corn down ⅜ to ½. Cotton was 35 cents a bale lower to 30 cents higher. Wool top and silk futures slipped after early strength.

The Curb was fairly steady. Gainers of fractions to a point or so were American Cyanamid "B," Electric Bond & Share, Cities Service, Gulf Oil, Humble Oil, Sherwin Williams and American Gas. Ending behind were Venezuelan Petroleum, Fox Brewing and Phoenix Securities. Volume here approximated 81,000 shares versus 75,000 the day before.

Marts and Banks To Close Today

In observance of Washington's Birthday, all major security and commodity markets in the United States will be closed today. Washington banks, building and loan associations and the Stock Exchange also will be closed.

SEC to Receive McKesson Drug Compromise Plan

New York, Feb. 21 (AP).—A compromise plan for reorganization of the big drug firm of McKesson & Robbins, Inc., submitted by Trustee William J. Wardall, was ordered forwarded to the Securities & Exchange Commission by Judge Alfred C. Coxe in Federal court.

All objections to a previous Wardall plan on the part of creditor committees were withdrawn by stipulation and the preference stockholders committee withdraw its own alternate plan.

The SEC is expected by the court to file an advisory report on the new plan before March 31. If it meets with SEC approval, Judge Coxe will hold hearings on its fairness, equitableness and feasibility.

The new plan proposes reduction of the firm's capitalization to $17,700,000 from the present $45,510,600 through retirement of present debentures and stock by exchange for new securities.

Trustees Appointed For Florida Railway

Jacksonville, Fla., Feb. 21 (AP).—Federal Judge Louie W. Strum today appointed former United States Senator Scott M. Loftin and Edward W. Lane, president of the Atlantic National Bank here, as trustee and cotrustee of the Florida East Coast Railway.

The road is now in bankruptcy with a view to reorganization. The appointment came after a hearing for counsel representing all creditors and stockholders relative to the trusteeship.

Sharp Decrease Foreseen in Hog Crop This Year

By the Associated Press

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics said yesterday that it expected supplies of hogs during the remainder of the current season, ended September 30, to be between 15 and 20 per cent smaller than in the corresponding period last season.

This reduction, the Bureau said, would reflect last year's smaller pig crops.

Reporting that hog prices were now about $1.50 per hundred pounds higher than they were two months ago, the Bureau said that if domestic demand continued to improve, prices probably would advance somewhat more before the end of the marketing year.

Prices of beef cattle were reported to be around $2 to $3 per hundred pounds higher than a year ago.

The Bureau predicted that supplies of fed lambs would decrease seasonally during the remainder of the fed-lamb marketing season which ends May 1.

Cotton Futures

New York, Feb. 21 (AP).—A split price trend in cotton futures today depressed old-crop deliveries 6 to 7 points but lifted new-crop months 5 to 6 points. The old-crop months gave way to March liquidation prior to first notice day next Tuesday and Southern hedging. A firm undertone followed the week's sustained advance. Distant deliveries responded as much to small pressure as lively demand. Limited offerings reflected a growing belief in some quarters that there would be few changes in the Federal farm program next season.

Worth Street textile dealers reported heavy industrial and coarse yarn cloths continued to move in substantial volume. Demand for fine gray goods remained slow.

Tin Declines On Threat of U. S. Action

By the Associated Press

Major commodities for future delivery moved irregularly lower yesterday after a general rise most of the week.

Tin dropped .75 to .90 of a cent a pound at New York in the wake of a threatened action by the Office of Production Management to commandeer supplies if necessary. Zinc closed unchanged to .30 of a cent a pound lower while lead and copper tended upward.

Cotton closed 35 cents a bale lower to 30 higher, with distant months ahead and nearby deliveries lagging.

Wheat at Chicago finished unchanged to ⅜ of a cent a bushel lower in a market unsettled by reports of troop movements in the Balkans and presence of German soldiers in Spain. Corn dipped ⅜ to ½ cent.

Also lower at New York were cottonseed oil and coffee.

The Associated Press Weighted Index of 35 wholesale staples sold in spot cash markets, based on 1926 as 100, advanced to 77.30 from 77.28 Thursday.

Automobile Deductions

With the number of automobile owners registering in the millions, the question of deductions for the cost of operation and maintenance of a motorcar frequently arises.

The purchase price of an automobile, whether it is to be used for business or pleasure, cannot be deducted from gross income. If used for business, it is a capital expenditure; if used for pleasure, it is a personal expenditure—both deductions being expressly prohibited by the income-tax law.

Several deductions, however, are allowable in connection with the cost of maintenance and operation of an automobile, used either for business or pleasure.

If used exclusively for business, deductions may be taken for the cost of gasoline, oil, repairs, garage rent, and other necessary operation and upkeep expenses. Depreciation based on the cost of the car and its estimated useful life, also is deduct

We simply start off today's little item with the definition that: News is stuff that Stoopnagle and Budd are back again after four years is!

That stoopefying pronouncement being the Stoopnagle way of saying that the famous radio team of some years back is to be heard together again over WJSV and the Columbia network at 5:30 Sunday night, for one time only.

So, to use another of Colonel Stoopnagle's daffynitions: "Stoopnagle is the stuff that on February 23, you'll lose a lot of peachy things and stuff if you don't tune in . . . and Budd."

The Colonel further continues: "Stoopnagle - and - Budd - Are Back-Again-Week will be celebrated all over the country—except in 48 of the smaller States. Historical fact—Stoopnagle and Budd got together in 1930, and the very next year was 1931. Famous characters will be reintroduced, such as: Meticulous J. Hush, the man who puts the sheets of tissue paper between calling cards; J. Garibaldi Twitchdigit, the not-toucher of 'Don't Touch the Wet Paint' signs; Filbert J. Fiddlestuffer, proud peddler of foithboinders, whatever they are. And there'll be a revival of the Stoopnagle and Budd which-end-of-the-ferryboat-is-the-front company; a flashback to the Keep-Stoopnagle-Out-of-the-White-House campaign and a renewal of Stooptopia (where days begin at noon so everybody can sleep late, etc.)"

Farm Institute Hears Acheson On British Aid

By the Associated Press

Des Moines, Iowa, Feb. 21.—Assistant Secretary of State Dean Acheson said here tonight that "totalitarian aggression" must be kept out of all parts of the Western Hemisphere if it is to be kept out of the United States.

Acheson discussed "the world crisis and the American farmer" at the evening session of the fifth annual National Farm Institute which has as its general topic, "Economic Preparedness and Agriculture."

Nelson A. Rockefeller, of the National Defense Council's office for the coordination of commercial and cultural relations between the American republics, said United States exporters have begun to handle advertising in Central and South American papers and periodicals in such a manner that the advertising revenue "is not used to foster anti-American propaganda in those countries."

Asserting that there are some who "refuse squarely to face the realities," Acheson said:

"I am profoundly convinced that our best—indeed our only—chance of safeguarding our interests as a free and independent nation lies in extending adequate and timely material aid to Britain and the other victims of aggression.

"Unless we do extend effective aid, we shall face, virtually alone, the full impact of totalitarian aggression in this hemisphere."

He said a phase of a defense "which has not been, and must not be, neglected is the establishment of the solidarity of the Americas and a system of continental defense. The protection of the Panama Canal, so essential for our defense, is but one of the many considerations involved.

"If totalitarian aggression, in all its sinister forms, is to be kept out of the United States, it must be kept out of this hemisphere."

In the light of mounting preparedness expenditures, a Canadian editor questioned the ability of the United States to maintain a farm program which already has cost "at least four billions."

G. V. Ferguson, Winnipeg Free Press managing editor, contended that any farm program "that depends on national grants of that magnitude is bound to be in peril once national needs that are more urgent become apparent," and added that "such needs have now appeared."

The two-day forum is to be highlighted by Vice President Henry A. Wallace's address tomorrow night.

Other speakers on today's program included Norris Sayre, New York, vice president of the Corn Products Refining Co.; Joseph S. Davis, Palo Alto, Calif., of the Stanford University Food Research Institute, and J. K. Galbraith and Harriett Elliott, both of the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense.

Davis commented:

"There is no possibility whatever that we can maintain, in a war economy, either business as usual or consumption as usual or that we can live in the style to which we were accustomed in a peace economy."

Saying "there can be no 'business as usual' in the midst of a hurricane," Sayre expressed the opinion that industry must strive first to meet British and Greek needs.

"Second in urgency are our own military needs," said Sayre, a member of the Agricultural Committee of the National Association of Manufacturers. "Domestic nondefense requirements come third and last."

Death Valley Scotty Tells How He Met His Silent Partner

The story of Death Valley Scotty's partner and some of Scotty's philosophy concludes Walter B. Clausen's fourpart series:

Walter B. Clausen

Death Valley, Calif., Feb. 21.—"I was in Chicago one day," Death Valley Scotty said, "and I was broke.

"I saw a big building with a big sign about insurance. I figured there oughta be lots of money up there.

"I went up and asked to see the head man. They said the president was the head man. Let me to him, I says. Well, I got into his office and there he was, sitting behind a big mahogany desk. He said, 'What can I do for you, young man?'

"'I want to build a castle out in Death Valley,' I says.

"'How much would a castle cost?'

"'About two and a half million.'

"'That sounds reasonable,' he says. He called his secretary and said 'give this young man two and a half million' . . ."

That's Death Valley Scotty's story of the beginning of his strange partnership with Albert M. Johnson, then president of the National Life Insurance Co., who has been an unseen figure in the fabulous gold prospector's exploits almost from the start.

They Met in 1904

They first met in 1904. In 1906, Scotty gave Johnson a half interest in all minerals he located. When Scotty started building the amazing castle which now overlooks the northern end of Death Valley, Johnson's name was on the checks that paid the bills.

And as the source of Scotty's wealth has come increasingly under scrutiny, Johnston's name has come up more and more frequently.

The presumption always has been that Scotty simply had a lot of gold cached in the desert and tapped the reservoir from time to time. With the recent Federal restrictions in gold traffic, that kind of economic arrangement has run into complications.

Federal income tax investigators, for instance, have been inquiring where Scotty's money was coming from. He has told them—and they have been unable to prove otherwise—that he discovered a lot of gold in the early days, but that for the last 30 years or so he has had no income except what he borrowed from Johnson. It was to the Government men that he related his picturesque tale of the origin of his partnership with Johnson.

"The revenue fellers laughed," he told me a few days ago, "and said I didn't expect them to believe that. Well, I says, the castle's here. Ask Johnson—he's my banker."

Scotty always has been a will o' the wisp figure, but Johnson has been even more obscure. The facts about him are these:

He was born in Oberlin, Ohio, the son of a well-to-do-railroad man, in 1872, the same year that Scotty was born near Cynthiana, Ky., the son of a horse breeder.

While Scotty was going West as cowboy, pony-mail rider and Death Valley surveyor's helper, Johnson was working his way through Cornell and up from a railroad engine wiper to a station agent. He made money in the Missouri zinc boom of 1899, became president of the life insurance company, and traveled a lot in the Far West.

Doesn't Keep Books

They have maintained their partnership ever since. The Government investigator asked to see their books.

"A feller who drives jackasses for 30 years and has a bookkeeper trailing along ought to be in the bughouse, oughtn't he?" Scotty asked them. "Ain't that why they build asylums, for fellers like that?"

"Fellers in swivel chairs," he comments, "can't get the drift of what goes on in these rocks."

He stirred the Government's interest even more recently when he cagily informed the Secretary of the Treasury that 30 years ago he had buried ten $10,000 gold certificates, and inquired what he should do if he happened to run across them.

I asked him where they had come from.

"Well," he said, "I had a deal with Tex Rickard (the sports promoter) and maybe he gave them to me."

Met Wife in Candy Store

Scotty's desert palace has become part of the national reservation that has been made of Death Valley, and he now lives in a shack about six miles out in the desert, continuing his mysterious ramblings between trips back to civilization.

On a trip to New York as a young man he met a girl in a candy store and they were married. Their only child, Walter Perry Scott—Scotty traces his ancestry back to Commodore Perry—now is serving in the U. S. Navy.

E. R. Ballinger Transferred to Coast Guard

Edwin R. Ballinger, who became the Treasury Department's personnel director when President Roosevelt's executive orders went through two years ago, is leaving that post to take up duties in the Coast Guard.

BALLINGER

The transfer, according to W. Norman Thompson, administrative assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, follows "completion of the organizational work Mr. Ballinger set out to do." Thompson also said work of a similar nature "was piling up" in the Coast Guard as a result of expanded activities there. Ballinger goes to work there immedately.

As director of Treasury's personnel Ballinger had charge of organizing work in offices in which more than 10,000 persons are employed. During his tenure he conducted personnel surveys in many bureaus and divisions and effected several reorganizations.

A new director of personnel has not been selected, Thompson said last night, but acting head of the office will be James E. Harper, who has been attached to the department for several years.

Ballinger, 40, has been in Government service since May, 1916, when he was appointed a clerk in the Bureau of Internal Revenue. From 1930 to 1934 he was head investigator and examiner for the old personnel classification board and in the classification division of the Civil Service Commission. Otherwise, his work has been with the Treasury Department.

Sergt. McDuffie, Retired District Policeman, Dies

Before joining the Metropolitan Police Department here he had worked as a bookkeeper and clerk with the Southern Railway.

He joined the force in 1917 and had served as a private until eight years ago when he was promoted to a sergeant. During his youth he was with the Fourth Regiment, Virginia Infantry.

His record with the police department had been outstanding and on a number of occasions he was cited for meritorious work in the solution of crimes in the Northeast section of the city.

Contract Bridge

R. S. C. lost a club grand slam on the cards shown in today's box. He is very angry about it and we don't blame him. This is what he writes:

"If you don't think that the accompanying hand is a real heartbreaker, I'll eat next Sunday's complete edition except the sports section; and if you don't agree that it should have been bid to seven, I'll eat the sports section, too, including your column.

"Furthermore, if you can tell me how it can be made, I'll never write to you again. So there.

"The hand was dealt recently and don't let any one say it's a cooked-up hand because it happened to me, sitting there minding my own business."
